

EXCHANGES.

The students at Cornell are noted for their rough class fights. They are getting worse as years go on. This year the Sophomores mixed asofotida with the viands at the Fresman banquet and filled the room with chlorine gas from an adjoining apartment. Freshmen soon began to drop like weeds before the hoe of the editor when he was a boy, and toiled on the farm. The colored cook, or one of them, died from the effects of the gas. The students were used to it in class meetings and pulled through. We may live in the wild and woolly west but we can give some of the students of the effete east pointers on civilization.

A DOGGEREL BY THE MIDNIGHT M. SE.
Oh, Editors, kind and true,
Please tell me what to do,
To still the awful howl and bark
Of a dog at midnight drear and dark.
—Teedie.

To stop the howl no way we know,
But this might ease your woe,
When tired of listening to that,
Change off and listen to the cat.
—Mt. Vernon Seminary Record

O, thus—if so we may remark—
When wearied with howl and bored by bark,
The feathery tones of each midnight
howler
Are drowned with ease by another growler
—Aegis.

On last Friday evening the second preparatory class tendered a reception in Union hall to the visiting high school delegates. At the same time the Literary societies held a joint reception in Palladian hall. Both halls were crowded with prospective University students eager to catch hurried glimpses of university social life.

The Senior class met on Thursday afternoon to discuss invitations, pictures, etc. It has decided to have a plain engraved invitation with the names of the class on a separate slip inside the invitation proper. The Elite Studio which has done the Junior pictures for the annual was given the contract for class pictures.

A few zealously patriotic students got out in the cold on the night before Charter Day and decorated the town very freely with red and white paint. U. N. was seen next morning on sidewalks, sign boards, windows, walls and in every imaginable place. As a rule the victims took it very good naturedly. One, however, wrote to the Chancellor and asked him to send some one around to clean the paint off his new sign-board. The letter was posted on the bulletin board with the request that those interested attend to it. Of course they didn't.
