Any individual who chanced to visit the University of Nebraska the latter part of this week could not but note the downcast look of its many attendants. It is seldom that such an event as the resignation of any one causes so much regret, but our chancellor has so endeared himself to the hearts of all, has so been as one of us, that his departure is looked upon by every one as that of a dear friend instead of an official of the state.

No matter who may be secured, the progress of the university is bound to be checked for some time at least. We may secure one who has the ability to occupy the chair of authority fully as well as he, but it will take time to make his qualifications known to the people of the state.

We cannot deny but that the university and the state at large suffers a severe blow at the resignation of our present chancellor, and it will take the effort of every one to help lighten it.

While mournful for our loss, we can see that the chancellor greatly benefits his own circumstances by the change. No one will envy the success and honor which he has attained, and THE NEBRASKAN, as the representative of the student body of the university of Nebraska, feels safe in extending to Chancellor Canfield the heartiest congratulations of every attendant of this institution for the good fortune which has befallen him.

Work Begun.

Max Westerman was found Tuesday afternoon watching the work of resurrecting the foundations of the main part of the library building. He said: "Yes, they have started. The contract for the completion of the building has been let to Grace & Kelley, Lincoln contractors. They started this morning to clear away the earth from the foundations of the main part of the building, and will commence work upon the superstructure just as soon as material can be got upon the ground.

The wing is not yet completed inside, but that matter will also be taken up at once and the books will be in place by August. And, by the way, when this library building is finished it will not be a second Nebraska Hall. That building is a disgrace to the campus. When completed the library building will have cost in the vicinity of $100,000. It will be a building that we may justly be proud of, and well worth the exertion it took to get it."
