

THE REGISTRATION FIGURES

List of New Students Larger than Last Year.

THOSE HAVING MATRICULATED

A Complete List Giving the Names of the Matriculants for this Year—The Number Expected to Reach Four Hundred.

The exact figures on registration are not yet ready, owing to the fact that so many of the old students have not yet registered. Up to Thursday the number of new students who had paid their matriculation fee was 387 and it is quite probable that this number will be increased to 400 within a week. There are a number of former students and alumni who are at the University this year not included in the above figures. The following is a complete list of those who entered this fall as new students and have paid their matriculation fee:

Alice M. Cusaak, Ernest M. Danaway, J. S. Catherwood, Bessie B. Brown, Emma Wilhelmson, Cora Wise, Annie Jones, Byron Ritter, Victor Peterson, Ella L. Stevens, Eugene C. Grice, Jas. E. ### HONOR IN COLLEGE LIFE.

Honor means that a man will fail rather than cheat in an examination. Honor among our students I think will soon be applied so that students who yield to temptation in these things will not be comfortable among us. It is for us as a student body as well as a faculty to see that honor is applied in these things. How often there is a false, a conventional standard of what is honorable, that has been bred in some way in the schools, that it is not any great thing to steal in writing an essay. It is not any great thing to pass off others' work as your own in class. But we know, every one of us, when we stop to think, that when we come to this University we must have no such practices, and we must see to it that the schools learn that conventional false standards cannot hold. There must be honesty which is really radically the same as honor. Honesty we have limited in modern times as a Yankee notion to mean square dealing. You know when Pope says, "An honest man's the noblest work of God," "honest" meant an honorable man—not just some man who dealt squarely where it might be profitable to do so and might secretly in other lines be dishonorable; but we must have square dealing. Let it not happen that there comes to the office a note from a washerwoman or from any tradesman in this city that some student has left and not paid his honest debts. Why, in what you call aristocratic Oxford, when it comes to the time for conferring degrees there is a special pause in the exercises that any tradesman or anyone in the city may come and pluck the gown of the candidate about to receive a degree, if that candidate has any debt whatsoever, and the degree is withheld. Let us have honor in these matters, and if by any grave misfortune a man has a debt that he cannot meet with money, let him meet it with his manhood; let him see his creditor and arrange upon some honorable basis until he can give further satisfaction.

We are in a city of considerable size. We are in a city with special temptations for young men and young women. By the statute of the regents no one may avail himself of the privileges of this institution who breaks the laws of the land. There must not therefore be gambling. There must not be gambling. I say it under the rule of honor. Men of honor, even the driving aristocrats, who have a certain conventional honor, gamble at their peril. There is nothing that so stealthily undermines manhood as gambling. Even petty thieving has sometimes occurred; but the students can stop that. Thieves may or may not be weak, abnormal brethren. They must be handed over to the law of the land, for we are a State University. But you will see that honor prohibits yielding to such temptations as these, that have, if rumor be at all correct, sometimes smirched the good name of the University. Honor as narrowly, popularly interpreted means for a man that he keeps his word. "Upon my honor," you say, and that is as good as an oath. Honor as narrowly and popularly interpreted as regards a woman means purity. Let us as an advanced institution know that there is here no discrimination as regards sex. Honor, young women, demands of you just as strict truthfulness as of men. It is true, according to statistics, that women in doing business are a little less anxious to be accurate in truthfulness (laughter) in keeping their word. This is known by statistics. Some of the boys can testify that you at least change your minds. That is your privilege, especially when you consider the boy. But it is necessary—if the present standard of thought and ethics, which is to be the standard of ethics for the land, is to be carried forward—that women be especially attentive in care of speech. That they do not exaggerate. That they keep any promise honorable and reasonable, and that they only give such promises. That they be careful about what might become gossip, might injure another. The young men have, by the traditions, to be careful about honor in the sense mentioned; and you young men, on the other hand, in this advanced day must know that there is no excuse for you to sin against honor as it means chastity and purity. You can be no less careful than your sisters. This is the standard of ethics as old as the gospel and as new as the most advanced thought in college ethics. And in these things apply this great bond of honor that is fundamental in our state. Honor brings with it courtesy. Courtesy is but a manifestation of honor. Is there a regulation, for example, that there shall not be conversation in the library, it is for the good of the general university state. It is that earnest readers may not be interrupted. Then courtesy as well as neighborliness demands that you think and that you restrain yourselves from conversation there. And so honor in the form of courtesy will affect every relation between student and student, between student and professor, between professor and professor. Honor, finally, is to be applied in patriotism. We stand with responsibilities to the public, a university of the people. Individually and privately you are to be doing your thinking and your full duty as citizens—those who are citizens—and those who are not are to prepare for citizenship. But the patriotism which you are to cultivate—for you are no selfish, isolated scholars here—will demand that among yourselves you keep a spirit of sweet reasonableness, no matter how sharp be your differences of opinion, that you respect the opinions of others, and that you, with all of us, see to it that this University, while it is out of politics, bears its part in the great sense of teaching thoughtful study and practice of patriotism. We will conclude this morning—if it is your wish, as I hope it is—in doing something suggested by a story. A person was looking very pleased indeed. Someone said to him, "What are you so happy about?" "Why," said he, "I have just come from the dentist's." "Well, why should that make you so happy?" "Because I have got some new hints for the college yell." We will conclude if you will rise and give the college yell.
