AFFAIRS IN THE BATTALLION.

At last the battalion is to be uniformed. The bids for making the uniforms were opened last week and Paine & Warfel, a local firm, were strongly recommended by the commandant as most worthy of the students' patronage. In less than a month it is hoped that the motley aggregation which now assembles three times a week in the armory at the sound of the bugle, will be transformed into a neatly uniformed battalion. The uniforms will be of the same color and general design as heretofore and it is thought that the battalion will be fully uniformed before the Thanksgiving vacation.

The question of forming a fifth company in the battalion has not yet been definitely settled, but if the supply of men holds out the five companies will undoubtedly be formed. But many have been excused from drill during the past two weeks so that the total number of cadets has decreased very materially rendering the formation of a new company somewhat uncertain.

The new cadets now consider themselves full-fledged soldiers as they have been allowed to relinquish the distasteful setting up exercises and begin drilling with the rifles. They are not so awkward with a gun as might be imagined and within a month the battalion will be ready to get down to steady work.

Makes a Record for Itself.

quality out to the best advantage. He sings with scarcely any effort and with a true rich tone. Bob Manley's ability as a comedian was the factor which brought his song to its full appreciation. It was intensely humorous, and the spirit and action of its rendering was pre-eminently suited to the words of the song.

"My Onliest One," by H. S. Evans, and "Mr. Johnsing Turn me Loose," by J. T. Sumner, were the next vocal selections. Both were well rendered and seemed suited to the boys' style of singing.

"The Baggage Coach Ahead" was a local potpourri, by Manley and Mueller. They were encored three times and only stopped when requested to do so by the rest of the troupe. This was occasioned by their remarks to the effect that they would tell about the Ames game.

The intervals between solos was well filled up by jokes which concerned everybody from Professor Ward down to the freshmen with a golf suit.

The first part closed with a selection from the cadet band, a take-off on a rehearsal of that much abused organization.

Fred Ryons' club singing was well done and won him an enthusiastic encore. Jack Kind played an accompaniment to him.

Chapman and Franklin did well with the guitar and banjo-mandolin.

"The Fatal Message" was the title of the farce with the following cast of characters: Thadeus Perkins, Bob Manley, Robert Yardsley, Geo. Bartlett, Jack Barlow, Ralph Mueller, Ed. Bradley, Frank Rabin, Mrs. Perkins, Phil Russell, Mrs. Bradley, Burt Cosgrove, Miss Andrews, Bert Watkins. Just what the fatal message was is not yet clear to many who were present. They waited patiently after the curtain was drawn in the hope some one would explain. But as the actors did not evince any inclination in that direction part of the audience dispersed and the rest went in search of their overcoats which the "coons" borrowed for the opening scene.

The make-up of the feminine characters in the farce was even better than last year. Phil Russell had his walk under better control and was nicely robed in a decolette gown. Bert Watkins and "Cos" both made excellent females, though the former had too much of a switchback motion.

Lottie Whedon deserves credit for the way she worked in helping the boys. To her efforts is due the smoothness of the performance which was quite noticeable.

The chapel was well filled, both top and bottom. About seventy-five dollars was cleared by the performance.

Arrangements have been made to repeat the show next Tuesday evening at the Funke. Those who missed the treat last Saturday will have an opportunity to make it up if they don't go home to vote for the occasion.

About half of the senior girls accepted Miss Lucy Green's invitation to an informal gathering at her home. A pleasant hour was spent in getting acquainted, when this was accomplished a business session was held and the matter of caps and gowns discussed. The majority were in favor of adopting caps and gowns as class insignia, to be worn throughout the year. Miss Helen Langer was appointed to report on prices etc. The girls expect to meet again Friday to hear the report and to take action on another matter which is supposed to be a secret. See if they can keep it.
