 The Argonaut is authority for the truth of the following bit of humor: Upon learning that the navy department was naming new ships after some of our colleges, Yale, Harvard, etc., Admiral Dewey declared that he had two ex-Spanish ships to rechristen one of which would be called The College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, and the other the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.
 After winning from our foot ball team so easily the K. C. Medics thought Kansas University would be easy. They found their mistake when the K. U. scored easily outplaying them from the start. The Medics then tried their old slugging tactics; the K. U. claiming that every man on her team was intentionally slugged. At last Smith, the K. U. big guard caught Lewis of the Medics in the very act of slugging, and delayed the game long enough to lay him out. The umpire was in sympathy with Smith, it seemed, and would not rule him out unless Lewis went too, so the game broke up in a brawl!
