EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE senior class have been recently treated to a splendid sample of fraternal love. In the contest for class president the lines were drawn in such a way that it looked very much as if the class would have a fraternity man for president for the spring term. In fact, the place was offered to a certain member of one of the fraternities, who might have been elected without any trouble. Then comes forward a brother fraternity man with another candidate, assigning as a reason that he would not under any circumstances support his brother who was mentioned first. As a consequence neither was elected. Personal spite and aggrandisement was stronger than the bonds of fraternity. Oh consistency thou art indeed a jewel. When, oh when, brother frat will you cease to preach and prate about holy ties, etc., etc.

STEPS have been taken to form an inter-collegiate barbarian association. It is needless to say that this meets our most hearty approval. Our association should without fail become a charter member. We would suggest that an inter-state convention be held for the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization and of adopting a constitution. While plans are being discussed and perfected, we would suggest that our own association agitate the question and do their part towards realizing this, our long wished for plan. We can do a hundredfold more for the cause of barbarianism by organizing and building up a strong inter-collegiate association, than by carrying on a fruitless and undignified warfare against fraternities. Our own association is too loosely organized. There is not that pride and loyalty and enthusiasm so manifest in our literary societies. This is all on account of slackness in organization. Let us have an inter-society organization with working committees, the chairmen of which shall constitute the executive committee of the association. There is an abundance of work for these committees to do right now. If ingenious they would find many other things to do not thought of now. The Palladians have made a commendable start. What society will be next to fall in line? Some one give us a barbarian yell, a regular stem-winder, let the college bard construct us a song on the same plan, let us have all the paraphernalia of college organizations, and enthusiasm will not be lacking
