EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE freshmen and sophomores are to be commended for the orderly way in which they carried out the cane break.

THE large increase of students this year tends to prove that what the university needs is advertising. Many a youth, eager to obtain knowledge, was surprised when he read on the hand bills that were issued fair week, "TUITION FREE."

WHAT Kansas lost Nebraska won. The selection of Professor Canfield as chancellor means progression for the University of Nebraska. It means that the university will now enter a career more prosperous than ever before. The chancellor is a man of whom the state may feel proud, of whom the university may indeed feel proud. He is peculiarly fitted for the position he now occupies. The university is becoming more systematic, more progressive, more active each day. The chancellor is for the best interests of the University of Nebraska first, last, and all the time. With such a man at the head of this institution, there is no reason why the enrollment of 1900 may not reach two thousand students. The university has long felt the need of such an executive officer.

TO THE new students who find so many advisers among the older students, we say, take all the advice you can get, then do as you please. Above all things do not be a recluse. Be aware of what is going on around you. While you may receive a vast amount of learning from your text books, yet to be an intelligent student you must also seek knowledge elsewhere. The various societies of the university offer social and literary refinement. The several literary societies are most sincerely recommended to students who wish to join some circle by which their college life will be made more pleasant, as well as more highly cultivated. The literary societies furnish work supplementary to the work done in the class room. The value of the literary societies is inestimable. Students who are ambitious to become orators, essayists, or public speakers should avail themselves of the opportunities that the literary societies afford. They welcome you all with open arms. You are most cordially invited to attend their weekly programs and their various debating clubs.
