EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is sincerely hoped that the chancellor's request in regard to persons calling at his office before they go sauntering through the halls, knocking on the various doors in search of some student, will be strictly observed. If matters are so pressing that a body cannot wait fifteen, twenty, or even thirty minutes, then, of course, permission may be granted. But, unless such is the case, let the recitation go on undisturbed. Continued interruption during a recitation is annoying and a nuisance to both students and professor. It is hoped that this request will produce some reflections on the part of the prowling habitue.

THE sentiment in George W. Danvers' article on the accredited high school system seems not to have been approved by some of his fellow alumni. In this issue of THE HESPERIAN, we publish the views of other members of the university alumni.

It is not our intention to comment upon this subject; but we willingly publish whatever any one has to say concerning the system. If our university accredited system is faulty or wrong, then it is for the best interests of the university that such should be known in order that whatever faults there may be, may be properly adjusted. If, on the contrary, the accredited system is eminently the proper thing, then that fact should be thoroughly set forth.

THE students have ample reasons for rejoicing over the increased library facilities. In addition to the already liberal library privileges, the students may now have the pleasure of loitering in the library five evenings of the week from 7 to 10 o'clock P. M. The students have long wish for such a privilege, and will, no doubt, take due advantage of the same. We believe that we express the sentiments of every student in extending most hearty thanks to the faculty for bringing about this change.

The library will be in the efficient charge of Miss Green during the evenings, when it will be used only as a library of reference. Since the number of students have increased, the classes are so large that there are not enough books on a single subject to supply each member of the class. Two or three members of the class will not be able to monopolize the reference books any longer. The faculty are always ready to adopt measures and make those changes that are most beneficial to the students.
