

do, the class stepped out under the trees in the yard while Kenyon took a group picture of the class. Wednesday morning the class was invited to breakfast with Chancellor and Mrs. Canfield. It was interesting to note the military promptness with which each arrived there that morning. Notwithstanding the fact that they had gorged themselves for two days previous, they continued to eat for some time after the busy chancellor was compelled to leave for his office. The law students and regents were also present and all were delightfully entertained as well as feasted.

The Last Seniors.

Charlotte Andrus, first on the list, gets red headed very easily. She has a very pleasant disposition however, and has made many friends while in the university. Although of aristocratic birth she smiles on the plebeian as well as the patrician. She will probably remain at home until some worthy gentleman with another and more desirable name comes upon the scene.

Avery, Samuel Avery, who is often spoken of as a very good man, is next in alphabetical order. Mr. Avery is not so well known as many of his associates, but is well known in the laboratories. He is a scientist and has risen rapidly in that line of work during the past year or so. Mr. Avery's best friends are those who know him best. He will teach next year in Beatrice. We expect to see him professor in some great university at no distant date.

James H. Barkley—the ladies' man, has achieved distinction in the military department and in athletics. He sits on the front row in chapel and leads in singing. He has a solid girl in every state in the union including Kansas and the state of Columbus, Neb. He is probably the most modest young man in the class. He never talks except when he has some one to talk to. He is well known and well liked by his associates. He will depart soon for Indiana, where he goes to accept a position as electrical engineer.

W. E. Brook is a man who has made a reputation in the university as a musician, warrior, cane thief, engineer, and is a member of the university triplets. Although not like Tennyson's Babbling Brook in all particulars, yet he gives promise of going on forever and is becoming famous. His tripod will go with him.

E. P. Brown was for three years a shining light in the class of '01, but has been engaged during the past year in the banking business and expects to continue in the same calling after graduation. He has a solid girl.

Theo. Brugger, the jolly Schweizer from Nobesville, gives promise of constructing many shining lights in the world whether he ever becomes one himself or not. He will enter the world as an electrician and we predict that his path will be bright. He is not engaged, but may be before leap year closes.

Mr. C. D. Chandler, the athlete and easy going man is next in the list of renowns. Mr. Chandler, during the last two years has been the main stay in our base ball team. He has also done much for the foot ball team, and as business manager of such teams, is a rustler. He has a pleasant smile for everyone and consequently has a host of friends who will miss him when he is gone. He will enter business' perhaps in Lincoln.

Mr. Horace Clason, it has been observed, walks like a duck, only more so. He has two faults against which we desire to warn the world. One is an inordinate desire to make jokes and the other is an equally inordinate desire to laugh at himself. These stamp the man. He is a gen

Miss Minnie DePue is a young lady who has retained the very front rank in her class at the same time that she has discharged numerous and burdensome social duties. Miss DePue was the successful contestant in the last Chase and Wheeler contest. Her kindness, sociability and wit justly entitle her to the distinction of being the most popular young lady in the university.

Mr. Dinges is another scientist of considerable notoriety. He has acquired distinction in catching bugs and in artillery drill. It was also said of him on class day that he was well versed in political economy. Those who are acquainted with him say that he is not as fierce as he looks.

Homer J. Edmiston is the next personage with a history. Edmiston is known in school as the classic. He is popular in society, in military circles and in the class room. He will probably specialize in political economy or if disliking a professorship will accept the presidency.

Miss Euegnia Getner is a young lady who has a bright smile and pleasant word for everybody. She is one of the few who have been able to make their four years' course in less than the allotted time. Her ability to talk has led her into oratory with good results. May her shade nor her smile never grow less!

The next member of this noted class in a year or two will swing a shingle to the breeze bearing the familiar legend, "C. A. Helvie, Pyhsician and Surgeon, Telephone 9568." He will publish soon a treatise on "The Effects of Boarding House Hash upon Crime; or Why the Boarder Jumps his Board Bill."

Paul L. Hibbard will tread a "beaten" path and extract the greatest amount of sweetness possible from the things he comes in contact with. He expects soon to return to his work in the Louisiana sugar factories. He is still willing to receive a limited number of proposals from eligible young ladies. This last is strictly confidential.

Mamie Hullhorst is one of the most classical and reserved girls of the class. She rivals Miss Getner in stature and is a thorough student in every particular. She will become a teacher.

Prof. F. D. Hyde.—The seniors consider themselves equal to any call upon their genius, but only one of them became a professor before he graduated, and that one was the aforesaid Hyde. Mr. Hyde is pretty, vain, conceited yet withal kindly and lovable in disposition. To end up with, he is captain of company D and a brother to every other girl in the University.

When Mr. Kenyon was a little boy he used to wade in the Thames. His delight was to let the clams bite his feet. As he grew older his ambition became higher. For six years he has patiently worked at his special line of investigation. The clams during this period have faithfully performed their duties—every chance they have secured during the university course of Mr. Kenyon they have bitten his fingers. Now he feels that he needs a change. With his diploma under his arm he steps out into the broad and unsympathetic world. But what will he do? It is possible that he may continue his love for clams, but it's altogether likely that he will find something of a warmer nature on which to set his affections.

Stella Kirker well known especially during the last year as class entertainer. Miss Kirker has a very kind disposition and is very pleasant to all whom she meets. She is an energetic and conscientious worker in the class room and will always be remembered by her friends.
