

is always ready for fun, though she never neglects her books. She will probably continue her study at some other school.

Captain Maghee of company C is the interesting title of a young gentleman who, because of his connection with the meteorological station or weather bureau, has obtained a wide reputation for non-veracity. For this reason we commend him as circulating editor of any newspaper, and feel confident that he would have scored a success. Morg. is popular, quiet, obliging and has a general eyes straight-to-the-front air, which marks him at once as being a conscientious and hard-working student.

Lydia Mullon, another classical girl, is well known in society circles. She is fond of athletic sports and a most earnest student. She also possesses considerable musical talent. Her future is unknown but suffice it to say that it will be as bright as the brightest.

J. Boyd McDonald continues his work as clerk in the governor's office, but intends to take up the study of law ultimately. He is prone, however, to become an anglo-maniac; he estimates values by the pound. We predict for him, however, a bright future.

H. E. Nelson is one of the sweetest men in the class. He has given his attention particularly to the chemistry of beet sugar and sugar beets, and expects to identify himself with this growing industry.

Mr. Walter B. Pillsbury entered the state university two years ago. Previous to that time he attended the university of Iowa. While here, he has become noted for two things. His faithfulness as a student, and his bashfulness while girls are present. To the former his professors and class-mates will testify. To the latter a ready second can be obtained from the two girls whom he walked twenty-four miles to see, and then was afraid to speak to them. It is understood that Mr. Pillsbury intends to study for a profession. Whatever his intentions may be at present, it is prophesied he will become famous for all time, that our children and our children's children will call his name blessed, from the fact of the prominent position he took in favor of woman's suffrage after graduation.

A little, insignificant looking lad, fresh from his mother's apron string, with the hay seed still in his hair, entered the university building six years ago. He passed the examinations and became a full fledged prep. O, ye Gods! What a mighty oak will develop from the small acorn! The then little lad was no other than our strong, manly, brilliant and ambitious Chester. Mr. Porterfield has grown so large that the university will no longer contain him. He expects to go out on our broad prairies and survey them to his heart's content. While with us he has made for himself two names. He is called one of the "triplets" and the "funny man of the university." We wish him success, and feel that the world will be better for his having lived in it.

Miss Louise Pound, a favorite in society and the class room, is the next to engage our attention. She has been thought by many to be "cold-hearted." This is due, perhaps, to the fact that many have not become well acquainted with her. She has many admirable traits of character and will be successful in any thing she undertakes.

George Lawrence Sheldon, the all-round man, is one of the most original and striking figures in the class. He is popular with the boys and with the girls. He rides a wheel. He has been known to take a header. He has a solid girl, or will have if nothing happens. While in Omaha he re-

The Hon. Chas. M. Skiles, ladies and gentlemen: A man of infinite wit, an orator, athlete and journalist. A man of strong anti-soldier and anti-rum proclivities; all muscle, mind and morals. Shows a strong affinity for feminine beauty. As to his future—he will probably teach a while, study law, and—when he can't do anything else—get married.

Lura Stockton is one of the few girls who have been with the class since prepdom. The fact that she has overcome with distinction the obstacles which have appeared in her six years' course is sufficient guarantee that she will succeed in whatever she undertakes. The teaching profession welcomes her the coming year. Her friends do not prophesy that will become an old maid.

W. L. Stockton possesses unusual energy and perseverance, as is evidenced by his work in and out of the university. He is at present connected with the Lincoln electrical street railway company as electrician, which position he will probably continue to fill for some time. Lesser is noted for his bashfulness, timidity and chronic fear of femininity.

Miss Josephine Freeman, the last girl on the list, deserves the highest compliment for her work and life. To see her is to like her, to become acquainted with her is to love her. It is not too much to say that she is a universal favorite. A musician, a scholar, she has few equals in society or the class room. She is fitting herself for a teacher and we predict for her unbounded success.

L. E. Troyer is noted particularly for his punctuality in attendance at Chappell exercises. He will travel this summer in the interests of the Y. M. C. A. and will ultimately become a foreign missionary. People also think that he will get married.

J. B. White has made a record as a student and athlete that the first preps may well envy. His athletic training especially fits him to pursue his chosen profession, the law. Jake does not expect to get married.

Thomas Frederick Arthur Williams, is noted for his beauty, intelligence, oratory, and proneness to perpetrate puns. Recognizing his peculiar political qualifications, he has decided to enter the petty-fogging profession, and will probably study law in Omaha next year. We predict for him fame, fortune, and the presidency of the United States, when the prohibitionists get strong enough to rule the roost. The worst that can be said of him is that he shows a strong tendency to return to heathen religion: he worships at the shrine of Minerva.

Daniel Worth, gentlemen, is really the only man of worth in the class, that is, judged from the standpoint of Worth. Daniel never allowed his college spirit to interfere with his study of the law while in school. He is even now a rising jurist and will make his mark as a lawyer.

B. C. Yates will survey in the Rocky mountains during the coming year. His thorough training and practical experience commends him to those who are seeking competent engineers. As soon as he surveys a new railroad from Lincoln to Alaska he will get married and settle in Lincoln.
