It pays to be an editor of a college paper, at the University of Pennsylvania. There, all editors are excused from a certain amount of their English work.

Women are now allowed to pursue advanced courses of study at the University of Virginia. They are not allowed, however, to attend lectures, but may receive separate instruction. Their examinations are also separate. While they may pass the same standards for proficiency as men, they are not allowed to "graduate" after the manner of the men.—Ex.

We sincerely pity the poor innocents who have to attend chapel upon Saturday. To sit under the droppings of the sanctuary on school days is often quite a task, but to do it on Saturday must often be nearly work. We are aware that students take umbrellas when they go in damp places. We wonder if they leave them behind when they attend compulsory chapel exercises.

We wonder if so many of our exchanges that publish foot-ball notices after foot-ball notices, do not do it because it is much easier to fill their papers with this sort of "hand me down" material, than to write up something original. Foot-ball is all right in its place, but it should be remembered that this place does not extend in time all through the college year and in position all through the college paper.

The Annex appears in holiday attire quite oblivious to the burning coals that the Niagara Index has heaped upon its head. The "hoary headed monk" of the last named paper must have been ressurected for just long enough to put two or three dying gasps upon paper. The Index reached us without scorching itself on the way. We can account for this in no other way than by supposing the paper something of a salamander.

There is a tendency in many colleges to increase the amount of elective work in the different courses. The idea of early specialization is becoming very prevalent. This change in procedure should be ventured upon very cautiously, for no one subject can be fully mastered by a person who has not a broad education. The worst phase of this question is, that a specialist too often finds this out too late: There is nothing like a broad and sound education upon which to build the superstructure of a specialty. A building without a firm foundation will never be a sky scraper.

The colleges of the United States will be fully represented at the World's Fair. Students will act as guides. Students will sing. Students will play foot-ball. Students will probably engage in boat races. And to make the occasion characteristic, students will go home from Chicago broke. The most tempting offer that we have yet seen, however, is the opportunity to roll invalids, cranks and old maids about the grounds on patent chairs. If any student comes out from this ordeal alive, the management should present him with a P. H. D. from Chicago University, and give him, without grudge, a deed to

"I'll be flam-boozled!" said the self-elected representative of the University of Nebraska, as he rolled over from the wrong to the right side of his downy sand-burr bed and wearily picked
