Somehow it became noised around not long ago that the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the father of his country, was again at hand. This was quite a surprise, but upon inquiry it was found that the rumor was probably so, although no one seemed to be quite sure of it or know much about it. The students of N. S. U. knew nothing of it, except as they had learned of it individually. There was no executive bulletin to the effect that patriotism should be instilled into the minds and hearts of the rising generation at all times and especially on February 22d, which is the anniversary of the birth of as great a patriot as ever lived. No formal announcement indicated to the tired and anxious would-be patriot that classes would not meet on this legal holiday. Our great and glorious country was forgotten, and its greatest leader ignored in the great swirl of work that must be continually carried on in order to build up this grand country that George won for us. No matter about the past! Do not stop to think of that! We are under an ethical obligation and the end must be attained as quickly as possible, even though we exile from our memory those persons who made it possible for us to enjoy the great benefits that are continually coming to us from the hands of a bountiful creator. Some preparations might have been made for the celebration of Washington's birthday had it not been for the fact that the University had a birthday of its own only the week before, and two birthday celebrations in so short a time would certainly have resulted in an abandonment of the University because of so little time devoted to actual work.
