

sas and over into Iowa. There's no reason in the world why we can't knock their eye-teeth out just like the foot-ball team did. We've got the grit and the time and the captain, (here, with a grin that seemed to ask for contradiction, but the scribe kept still.)

Scribe.—How're you fixed?

Captain H.—Well, that's just where the trouble is. The Uni. has always supported the foot-ball team and attended their games; but the base ball players have shuffled along with only half support or no support at all. It's a big shame. Last year we had to beg a dime here and there even to get enough for a ball to practice with. How can we do any good? How can we win games? It's an outrage on the school. If we had some means we'd show what we can do. Say, why can't we get some of that oratorical scrap wealth? Then we could do something. (Here a pause.)

Scribe.—Anything else? Captain H.—No. Guess not.

Here the scribe got up to leave, and looking over the captain's shoulder, he read the following discussion: "It is apparent that Odysseus wrote Homer because the work is written in the same style that the love-letters to Penelope are. These love-letters may be seen in the Archaeological Institute for the Preservation of Epistles, in London, England."

It is under the above name that the magazine of the English Club will appear about May 1. The members of the club have been collecting materials and working with the publication in view for a long time and the HESPERIAN will be no false prophet in predicting a book worthy of the 'Varsity. The professors of the English department and members of the board of editors are seeking the best possible productions of students and others. Vive la Magazine!

Miss Maude L. Berkey died at her home in Lincoln, Monday, February 25. Miss Berkey was a student at the University some two or three years ago. Last summer she was taken sick with malaria fever from which she never recovered. In November she went to Colorado with the hope of regaining her health, but growing gradually worse, she returned to Lincoln about a month ago.

The Union Society, of which she was a member, met Tuesday, and unanimously passed the following resolutions:

Inasmuch as it has pleased the Divine Father to take from our midst our dear sister, Maude Berkley.

Be it hereby resolved, That in her loss we recognize that we are bereft of a faithful worker and a true friend of the Society;

That we express our heartfelt sympathy with her parents in their almost inconsolable grief;

And that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Union Society, published in the college papers, and copies be sent to her parents.

THE JUNIOR ANNUAL.

When it comes to get-up-and-go the class of '97 takes a back seat for nobody. From the amount of enthusiasm shown in their recent class meeting for electing a board of editors to publish an annual next year, we may expect a fine publication. The board selected consists of as good material as could be secured. Thatcher and Riley will be chief editors; Corey and Oury, business managers; Grant and Everett, staff artists; and the Misses Ricketts, Anna Broady, Rhodes, Philbrick, and Messrs. Allen, Cameron, Parmelee, Barber, Hawksworth and Shedd, assistants.
