

belief in a higher power shown by Washington's life. From it he thought we should draw inspiration for the future.

The Lansing was well filled Charter Day to hear Rev. A. V. V. Raymond on "Higher Education in Its Relations to National Life." He divided his subject into three heads, commercial, governmental and sociological, and showed the advantages and needs of a higher education in each of these relations. The music was especially good and added not a little to the enjoyment of the evening. The opening piece was an overture by the Lincoln Philharmonic orchestra. Then the Glee Club sang, as only the Glee Club can sing, "The Scarlet and Cream."

The Society of Electrical Engineers met on Saturday evening, February 23, to consider the plan of making an electrical exhibit some evening during the spring. At that meeting they decided to make an exhibit of electric heating and welding, of electroplating, and of the telephone. It is proposed to make the exhibit both attractive and instructive, by using novel illustrations of the principles embodied in each subject. A lady's curling iron heated from an unseen source; a mass of iron raised to white heat by plunging it into a pail of water; a piece of one of the baser metals changed into gold by immersing it into a clear solution; and a talking table may be some of the novelties shown. This is the first attempt for the engineers at anything of this kind, but they have started out with well laid plans and firm resolutions. We wish them success.
