

beautiful Delsarte form—Ajax is with us. Could even the greediest Oliver Twist ask for more? And yet there is more—more galore. As the chancellor casually remarked in chapel the other day: "If I could not be a Weaver I would be a Quaintance," and the surging throng cheered tumultuously. But Nebraska is not even reduced to such a choice—glorious though it would be. It is not a case of how happy we would be with either, but how happy we are with both. For Hadley W. Quaintance is with us. He will lend his presence and voice and persuasive ways and active sympathy to the good work of snatching victory from the haughty southerners. And when Hadley W. goes out after any prize that depends on linguistic attainments he generally gathers it in. Everybody who knows anything at all knows that. And this time Quaintance is not only going after the prize, he is up with it, has passed it, is already three furlongs in advance of it—and what he doesn't know about Switzerland and popular rights isn't in the books or magazines—the librarian knows that.

Added to these tried and tempered warriors there is an ornamental piece of furniture in the person of ye humble scribe, whose good nature and personal attractions will add good form and eclat to the occasion.

In all it will be an event long to be remembered. It is to be hoped that the best of preparations will be at once instituted so that the distinguished visitors may be suitably received and pampered and cared for before being led off to execution.

In the words of our ex-Chancellor, let us welcome them with bloody hands to a hospitable grave.

Omaha Medical College.

THE address delivered by Chancellor MacLean at the commencement exercises of the Omaha Medical College last Tuesday calls attention to a flourishing school in our metropolis. We desire to call attention of HESPERIAN readers to its advertisement on page 14. The school is well conducted and the excellent results obtained could only be expected from the able faculty that have it in charge. Those intending to study medicine will make no mistake by taking their course at the O. M. C.

THE business management of the HESPERIAN will be pleased if delinquent subscriptions be paid at once. Please settle at Co-op. or with managers. This should be attended to.

Mrs. Manning, owing to illness, could not be present and her reading in the number, "He and She," was given by Miss Smoyer. Mr. Tucker sang a solo in place of a recitation which was to have been given by Miss Josephine Lottridge, who could not be present. The musical numbers were all very pleasing, as was attested by the hearty applause. The readings were exceptionally good, the acting graceful and effective, and was frequently applauded. The entertainment reflected much credit to those who participated in the program and on the association.
