

THE HESPERIAN

BIXBY'S RETREAT.

NO PLACE LIKE THE UNI.

Of course they say "What is right,"
That all ways lead to Rome,
And some one has found with deep insight,
There is no place like home.
They boast who dwell in the shades of Yale
Or Harvard by the sea—
There's another shadow of growing length
That's good enough for me.
There may be moss on those sunless stones
And an ancient grey, but then
There's less of inflated nothingness,
In the shade of the U. of N.

Diplomacy (?) is a farce best played with puppets moved by a single string. Make them characters, give them manhood, conscience and will, and the player rends his hair.

The player sometimes forgets his mask.

AN INQUIRER.

An inquiring student with more observation than money, sends the following questions to this department which we refer to the regents' committee:

1. Was the use which, according to the executive announcement in our worthy contemporary, the Students' Co-op, has ceased to subservise, a service to the Regents, the committee, the Chancellor, or the students?

2. Was the change suggested to make books cheaper? If so, why do I pay more for books this year than last? Or was it just to get a better looking and more widely known business man in the basement?

The most pitiable attribute of falsehood is the hallucination that age transforms it. Deck a lie with gray hair and it verily believes itself to be truth and dies a cheerful martyr.

Many a well has a glittering surface, but the first bucket brings up mud.
