RECEPTION TO SOLDIERS.

Last Saturday the ladies' auxiliary to the First Nebraska, gave a reception in the armory to the "Eighth Army Corps," all the members of the First Regiment in the city, and all of the members of the second and third regiments in the university. The hall was tastefully decorated with flags, bunting and flowers. A full bust portrait of Colonel John M. Stotsenburg, neatly draped in flags, hung in the center just in front of the pipe organ. Quite a number of Philippine, Chinese, and Japanese relics, kindly loaned by Lieutenant Colonel Frank Eager of the First Nebraska, were on exhibition. String music was furnished by the Ideal Mandolin club, which was exceptionally well rendered, especially the melody of German airs. Miss Marie Norine played a piano solo, an etude by Wamanhaupt, and Miss Len. M. Laucks, sang Schmede's "Summer." All of the music was highly appreciated. Adjutant Bert W. Whedon delivered an excellent eulogy on Colonel Stotsenburg. No one in the regiment is more competent to speak of Colonel Stotsenburg than Mr. Whedon as the two were almost continually together. Ira Kellogg, Company B, First Nebraska, read some original poems. Miss Robertson, president of the ladies auxiliary was called on for a few remarks, to which she very ably responded. A Filipino, who accompanied the First Nebraska rendered a very neat sword drill, and sang a Spanish song which proved one of the most pleasing numbers of the program. O. W. Meier concluded the program with a talk. E. E. Tilleson, president of the "Eighth Army Club" was chairman. Some time was then spent in a social way and in getting acquainted, after which ice cream and cake were served by the young ladies. The boys did not equal their former records, for this time they could not devour all the ice cream and cake offered them.

HIS MOTHER.

She was a little, wrinkled-up, old woman with locks of grey hair that fell below her old-fashioned, black bonnet, and her dim grey eyes were almost hidden behind a pair of steel-bowed spectacles. She wore a checked shawl drawn around her shoulders and fastened with a black-headed pin in front.

She stopped one after another of the students coming out of the gate, with the question: "Do you know where my boy, John Brown, is?"

But no one seemed to know where she would find John Brown.

Finally she mustered up enough courage to come inside of the campus, and then she started up the library steps. Just as she reached the outer door she heard a voice that sounded familiar saying:

"Come and go with us, Madge. We will go and get those flowers now that I owe you."

The inner door swung on its hinges and a young man and two young ladies came out. The young man's attire was of the latest cut and colors, from the claybank shoes on his feet, to the extremely high collar that protruded through his red neck-tie. He was half way down the steps before he saw the little old woman at the bottom, her face lit up with a smile. Suddenly he caught sight of her and stared.

"Mother!" he yelled, so loud that the librarian came out to see what was the trouble.

It took but one step for him to descend the rest of the stairs and the way he hugged and kissed his mother was a wonder,—yes that is what it was, simply a wonder.
