

adjutant calls, "Form battalion at the guard house."

"Fours right, column right, double time! March!" commands the captain, and the half dressed men move out of the company streets and form at the guard house, where the major takes command and the battalion moves off in double time. A skirmish line is soon formed and charges across the field at the enemy, which is soon routed, and the victorious companies return to camp and immediately fall into a sound sleep. When everybody has fallen asleep, Lieutenant Hull, who is officer of the guard, sets fire to a pile of rubbish in the battalion street and the camp is soon lighted up with a red glare. "The Guard! Fire! Post number two," calls the sentinel, and the tired guard are routed out of their blankets and brought at double time to the scene of the fire, and the tired men are turned out again to help suppress the conflagration.

When the reville blows at 6 o'clock nothing but snores are heard and no one stirs. Again the notes of the bugles ring through the camp, without awakening any one. Finally, just as assembly sounds, the alarm clock in the first sergeant's tent goes off and he wakes up with a start and thrusting his head out of his tent commands, "Company —, fall in!" The men roll over and go to sleep again, and it is not until the sergeant has entered each tent and routed out the sleepers that any one will respond to the call.

Sunday was spent in recuperating and making up lost sleep. Captain [unclear] of the day and Lieutenant Shane officer of the guard. The cadets broke camp Monday and returned to Lincoln tired, footsore, and feeling tough generally.

CAMP NOTES.

The representation by companies was as follows: Company A, 3 officers, 34 men; company B, 3 officers, 32 men; Company C, 2 officers 29 men; company D, 2 officers, 44 men; band, 22 pieces.

Geo. Bartlett had more handles to his name than any other officer in camp. He was quartermaster, surgeon, commissary, chaplain, first lieutenant, and chaperone.

The cadets played a game of baseball Saturday with the Fremont Normal. Senger and Ringer were the battery for the university, which won with a score of 16 to 8.

The boys appropriated a variety of signs from town and decorated their tents with them. One tent had the notice, "Rooms for rent. Inquire within." Another announced itself as "Conservatory of Music. Hours 9 a. m." "Board by day or week," appeared on another.

D company boasts that it is the only company which had every man in the guard house.

Sergeant Clinton was known as Sergeant Pshaw Ptolomy Clinton. He was severely wounded in the battle on Sunday morning.

Private Bell made a record as a sentinel by waking up the whole camp when he called the hours during the night.

Captain Langer is too soft hearted to make a good officer of the day. He can not resist a fair maiden's request to get inside the guard lines.

Cadets Harris, Lau, Hess and Wittman were known as the "Run Easy" and responded to the names of of Ah Bull, Cow, and Dog, respectively.

G. M. Hamilton, battalion photographer, took several fine views of the camp.

The following visitors came down from Lincoln: Mrs. Cady, Misses Cady, Thorps, Bonnell and Cunningham, and Messrs. Collet and Capt. P. James Cosgrave.

Blanket tossing was the principal amusement in company A street.

Company D furnished three orderlies for the commandant.

The people of Fremont were very hospitable and every kindness was shown to the visiting cadets.

The shirt-tail parade rather astonished the natives. They hardly knew how to take it.

next to bat, and every one hoped he would do something. He hit the ball all right, but the Minnesota left fielder got it. The tenth inning was done, and still the score stood three to three.

The Gophers won the game in the eleventh inning. Varco hit safe. Plymat bunted along the third base line and reached first before the ball was fielded. Freeman hit to Right, what seemed like a safe one, but Bell just reached out and took it in. Cameron hit a hot one to Hood, who was somewhat slow in getting his hands on the ball, and when he did he made a poor throw to second. Varco scored and Plymat went to third. Metcalf sent a fly to DePutron, who cinched it, but Plymat reached home before the ball did. Allan was caught at first. The score was now 5 to 3 in favor of the northerners.

The Nebraskans went to bat determined to again tie the score, but that was all there was to it, just determination. They went out in 1-2-3 order, and lost the best game of the season, after some brilliant playing.

A NEW ERA IN MEDICINE.

Dr. Angle of this city recently received a communication from Provost Harrison of the University of Pennsylvania, which may be of interest to prospective medical students. The University of Pennsylvania has always stood for scholarship and university methods as applied to medical teaching and has ever been on the alert for progress and scientific advancement.

The trustees have planned a group of buildings for medical work to cost a million and a half dollars. This group will consist of a medical hall, anatomical building, and laboratory building, which in addition to the present structures will form one of the most extensive systems of buildings devoted exclusively to medical teaching in America or Europe.

Work on the laboratory building will be proceeded with immediately. This laboratory will cost, exclusive of grounds and equipment, over half a million dollars, and in point of completeness will be without a rival in this or other countries. The building will consist of two stories and in addition to the laboratories will have two large and two small lecture rooms, with a seating capacity of 400 and 140 respectively.

The first floor will be occupied by the laboratories of physiology and pharmacology, while the entire second floor will be devoted to pathology.

Here will be found rooms and laboratories for histological, advance, comparative, neurological and surgical pathology. The museum of pathology is on the same floor in order to make available its large collection of demonstrations.

One of the most important features is the provision for fifteen private rooms, where fellows in pathology and thoroughly advanced students can carry on original work.

T. J. Hewitt and H. G. Senger were initiated into Phi Delta Theta fraternity Tuesday night.
