

SCISSOR WORK.

—He was a new student. A few stray hairs upon his lip attested the fact that he was engaged in a deadly struggle with a mustache. He went into a variety store on O street, and said to the proprietor:—"Have you Charles Reade's 'Lost Hair?'" "No, I have'nt," replied the storekeeper. "But," he continued, "I've got something that will make that mustache of yours start out like boils in spring time."

STUDENTS' FUN.—A professor, a teacher of German, was once very much disturbed by a bench full of Juniors.

At last, in his despair, he exclaimed, "That bench will leave the room and will stay outside."

Whereupon the young rascals carried out the bench, and left it outside and blandly returned to other seats.

"No, no," said the professor, "I do not mean that, I mean the young men will go out and the bench will return."

So the young men brought back the bench and sat on it, as though this was all that could reasonably be expected of them.

Another professor who was the pink of propriety, was sadly disconcerted in the midst of a lecture upon Edmund Spencer by a dozen rough and sporting characters, who came into the room without knocking, with all manner of dogs to sell.

Finally one man let the cat out of the bag (if we may use such an expression in a dog story,) by presenting a dirty scrap of paper, which read as follows:

"Wanted—A Dog: any breed will answer; highest price paid for mongrel pups. Apply to Professor —, room No. 2, — University. Bring the dogs between the hours of ten and eleven."

On another occasion, the same professor said to a student who had blundered terribly through a recitation:

"How far are you off from a fool?"

"I suppose," replied the student, measuring the distance between himself and the professor's table, "about seven feet and a half."
