

Blank Books, Tablets and Stationary at the Book Store of Fox & Struve.

The young ladies of the Dormitory secured an omnibus and paid a visit to the Penitentiary and Insane Asylum. They were highly pleased with their visit. Some of them remarked, however, that the convicts were given to selecting rather "loud" patterns for their suits; but they behaved very well and not a single convict tried to kill any body while they were there.

Stereo views of all the Prominent Buildings of Lincoln, including University and Dormitory on sale at Wheat & Ford's Gallery.

The Juniors will give an exhibition in the Chapel on the evening of the first Saturday before Thanksgiving. The following class will perform: Essays, Miss Minnie Williams, Mr. E. P. Unangst; Declamations, B. F. Parks, B. C. Arnold; Orations, J. H. Silvernail, Mar B. Fairfield; Debate, Miss A. R. Schuckman, Mr. J. S. Bridenbaugh. Mr. J. C. F. McKesson will preside.

A University student was approached by a minister during Conference who requested him to examine a book which he handed him. "The price of this work," said he, "is one dollar, but I am selling to ministers at half price, you may have a copy for fifty cents." The student succeeded in convincing him that he was not a minister although he had the interest of the Church at heart.

The cadets are going to Omaha Nov. 3d to participate in the reception of Gen. Grant. A car has been chartered and Col. Chase of Omaha proposes to bear part of the expenses incidental to the trip if the cadets find it burdensome. A communication has been received from the commander of Company H, tendering the cadets the use of the barracks during their stay, and an escort to and from the depot. The boys anticipate a big time.

Out-door Groups taken on short notice by our new artists, Wheat & Ford.

There was a great stir in the upper circles of mouse society the other day. It was caused by the return of a mouse which had been captured and escaped. During its captivity it visited the chemistry class and Prof. Collier and was inveigled into taking some laughing gas, much to the edification and amusement of the class. It was confined in the gas under a jar until it became insensible, but upon the removal of the jar and the contact of the fresh air, it suddenly arose and bidding a somewhat hasty adieu to the Prof and class, departed.

The sociable given by the University Union Oct. 3d, was a sociable in the true sense of the word. Nobody looked lonesome and we are confident nobody felt so. Every body sailed in and talked to every body else and every body else talked back. The circus caught the greater part of the objectionable element and the residue consisted of ladies and gentlemen. Abundant refreshments were served and instrumental music was furnished during the evening. When the hour to adjourn came all departed reluctant to go so soon, but well satisfied with themselves and the rest of the human race.

A number of young men, members of the Palladian society, broke loose the other evening and made night hid—that is discoursed sweet music on the evening air as serenaders. The bashful youths took in the Dormitory on their rounds and were prevailed upon to while away a few moments in the company of the twenty or thirty fair ones who have their abiding place there. The City Marshal and two assistants made their appearance soon after the departure of the serenaders but passed on in a short time.

(This last statement has no connection with the preceding part of the paragraph.)