1st. girl:—Isn't that moustache of Fulmer's just lovely?

2nd. girl:—Yes, but what makes it look so queer? It looks just as if a horn was growing out of each corner of his mouth.

1st. girl:—Oh! that's natural, you know.

All three societies are wide awake and doing good work. The friendly rivalry existing between them acts only as a stimulus to greater exertion. But they should be careful lest, in their zeal for new members, they receive students who will be neither a benefit to the society nor themselves. There is danger of getting more material than they can float.

Pursuant to call by the executive committee the oratorical association of the U. of N. met on last Wednesday and, after ordering some work done in the way of drafting a constitution, adjourned till the next day. Then this remarkable organization that had sent delegates to a convention and arranged for a contest before it was theoretically born, got itself into existence, and the treasurer began to collect the dues. Warner resigned the presidency and Will O. Jones was unanimously chosen in his stead.

Another resignation of Bus., Man. followed by another election. The late conduct of the board of editors was too much for Mr. Force and he at once resigned. O. B. Polk was immediately elected to fill the the vacancy. But before his election he was questioned as to whether his character could stand the strain and whether his reputation would not suffer from associating with the editors. These questions being properly answered he was allowed to go forth and prey upon any poor hapless student who is unfortunate enough to have fifty cents.

Verily, the way of the transgressor is hard. So at least the present board of editors have found it. Not satisfied with having hunted them out of town, the association met and passed resolutions of censure. Mr. Howe made fruitless efforts to get back his fifteen cents, and 'Sig'. Polk insisted between gasps, that "we have a right to the money if we want it"; but all to no purpose, the board still has the possession of the money, and has not yet decided whether it will make a trip around the world or go to the exposition at New Orleans.

The Union girls have organized a girl's auxilliary society which will probably be known by the sobriquet of G. A. S. The name is significant, but the energy with which the girls have taken hold of the matter would indicate that something more than gas will be evolved. Sketches critical, and analytical, of the works of some prominent author together with a biographical sketch of his life, will be produced at each meeting. In order to vary the performances, each programme will be interspersed with music. It is the intention of the girls to make the occasion of these meetings a social as well as an intellectual treat.

Delegations of students from Doane, York, Hastings, and the University met, pursuant to call, in the Union Hall the 21st ult. for the purpose of organizing the state oratorical association. A temporary organization was effected with C. G. McMillan in the chair. The convention went into a committee of the whole for the purpose of preparing a constitution. The committee having arisen and the constitution adopted, the organization was made permanent by electing Mr. Braught of York, President; G. W. Horton of Doane College, Vice President; and W. E. Johnson, secretary and treasurer. The first contest will be held at Hastings on the third Wednesday of April. Each delegation was fully awake to the necessity of energetic work for the first contest, and the prospects are that the coming contest will be one of the most interesting events of college life that has yet taken place in Nebraska.

Now the band boys are mad. They went to the Capitol to serenade the legislature, the last night of the session, and while playing one of their most heart-rending strains, a note, purporting to be from Churchill Howe, was handed to them, stating that if they would play some of their very nicest pieces he would go down with them to Crittenden's and set up the oysters. After playing all their pieces two or three times, Churchill remarked that his arms were tired, and Frankforter declared that he had lost his lip, and the others said they were played out. It was suggested that they should remind the senator of his promise; but judge of their surprise when the messenger returned with the report that Senator Howe was ignorant of any such promise. The truth gradually dawned upon the boys that they were the objects of a practical joke and they quietly gathered themselves up and stole away into the darkness, vowed vengeance upon the perpetrator.
