 The Wooster Collegian jumps on a certain McKennan who offers "to furnish you with orations and essays, for use in college, literary society or ~~commercial~~ exercises, at reasonable rates." We have a indistinct remembrance of something of the kind here. McKennan lives in Toledo, however, and our fellow hailed from Chicago. We are consequently forced to the disagreeable conclusion that there two specimens of contemptible meanness instead of one.

"We have a good joke on one of the boys," said a Chicago drummer. "I wont tell you what his name is, but he travels for one of the biggest milinery houses in Chicago. Not long ago he was at Milwaukee and got into a row at the station with a hack driver. The hackman was a big fellow, and presuming on his size, enjoyed himself several minutes abusing the drummer, who was a little man. The little chap stood it about five minutes and then his coat came off he gave it a vicious sling to the other side of the room. He meant business, and in forty seconds that hack driver had a black eye, a bloody nose, and was yelling lustily 'Take him off.'

"Of course, as soon as order had been restored, we all gathered about our drummer and congratulated him on his nerve.

"You did him up in scientific shape," said one of us.

"You bet your life I did," replied the milinery salesman, still a little excited; "I didn't get a first-class college education for nothing."

We welcomd the Pike's Peak Echo from Colorado College
 The Ohio University students are kicking for electric light in place of gas.

Harvard has a brass band of one hundred and eighty pieces.—Ex. That's brassy.

Academica for Nov. contains "The Rise of the Dramatic spirit in Elizabethan England.

The Michigan Argonaut rather indignantly repels a charge that it does not supply college news.

Univ. of Cincinnati has been injured by fire to the estimated amount of thirty thousand dollars.

"To be or not to be" has become the all-absorbing problem of our literary societies.—Courier,

We most heartily commend that article on college government in the last Vidette Reporter. "Them's our sentiments."

The Vanderbilt Observer comes out with a supplement. It is the address of the Hon. Howell E. Jackson. The Observer is enterprising.

The S. W. P. U. Journal hai six columns which are "sick-pied o'er" not with "the pale cast of thought" but with an article on "Mustache Culture."—B-o-s-h!

The Hesperian Society of Doane are thinking of building a society hall of their "very own." The dimensions are not stated but the enterprise in the endeavor is praiseworthy.

They are having a "time" at the K. S. U. over the increased stiffness of the course. Nebraska students have found that the only way to successfully meet such a move is not by complaint but by extra hard work.

Editors in general and college editors in particular are too frequently addicted to the use of generalities. Now we know from personal experience that generalities of the common sort do not take brains. To treat a limited subject well takes thought and work.

P. S. — The above remark about generalities and brains applies only to the exchange editor.

We clip the following piece of information from the Courier;—"The future influence of the students of our University cannot be underestimated". Explanations are in order.

Horace rode along the sacred way on a mule, but the modern Sophomore follows him on a pony.—Ex. It strikes us that the way of the modern sophomore is any thing but sacred.
