We are glad to welcome the Lincolnian again, but yearn to call attention to its department, "College World." Never, no never, have we seen a department of this character where so large a proportion of the items were veritable chestnuts—chestnuts from away back. Try as they may, even the best college papers will make breaks sometimes, but it shows a lamentable lack of care when by far the greater part of a department is antediluvian.

Knight and Gambee stood in front of Poehler's about eleven o'clock Friday night, seemingly in a great plight. They were lamenting in a very heart-rending manner, protesting to their female companions that it was just their luck, and how outrageous 't was, that oyster parlors close so early. Poehler suddenly appearing upon the scene, obligingly offered them his services, but alas, the echo of retreating footsteps was his only answer. They now want to hold a special meeting of the society for the purpose of debating the question: Resolved that a man ought to be hung who will open his restaurant after having once closed it for the night.

There is nothing like a practical application of the things we learn. We have an admirable illustration of this fact. Not long ago several co-eds of the Sophomore Physics class, were spending the noon hour in the chapel. One of them, who is not a blonde, fell into a meditative mood, and meditated thusly, "I have never been in the gallery, and would like to go there; but how can I? The doors are all locked and there are no posts to climb; now if there was only a powerful magnet up there. O, yes, I have it! If Mr. White was only up there, I would be drawn up immediately without any trouble." The other co-eds fainted.

"Yes, and thin there's so much woman about ye, ye'd go right down town and have me arristed; begorra if it wan't for that I'd thrash ye." M. S. (backing behind the door) "Do it! Do it!! Do it!!! The members of the N St. boarding club, minus Chapin, entered into a solemn contract not to shave again their upper lips. He who shaves first treats the club with oysters. The result is astonishing. The profuse growth that adorns the lips of Wheeler, McCance and Coddling is very becoming. Foree's so-called moustache is very extensive but not very far-reaching. Anderson's is being carefully treated and will probably survive the last cold snap. They are all doing fairly well except Gerwig. He is somewhat discouraged, but consoles himself with the thought that summer is coming, when he will stand a better show.
