

EXCHANGE BRIC-A-BRAC.

We are pleased to notice from an exchange that the University of Virginia has a new observatory costing $30,000 and a telescope costing $46,000. Note.—The telescope may long since have been worn out and the observatory may be in ruins but the item looks new and sounds well. We warn our readers not to place too much dependence upon the truth of the report. The only thing it proves is that there was once the observatory and telescope referred to.—Ed.

Cornell is possessed of probably the largest specimen of big-heartedness in existence. It used to belong to Jumbo and weighs 47 pounds.

Miss Kin Kats is about to be sent to this country by the Japanese government to be educated. She is the first Japanese woman educated here at the expense of the government. She will stay at Salem, Mass.

The Vanderbilt Observer for May has an excellent article on "Carlyle's Influence on his Contemporaries."

Commencement distinctions have been abolished at Brown University.

The Press and Badger takes occasion to lecture the Seniors on what their course should have done for them. Our esteemed contemporary reminds us (excuse a worn-out allusion) of the man who locked the barn door after the horse was stolen. Much rather ask of those just commencing what their course is going to do for them.

Again the editorials commence which begin with "Another year is drawing to a close." We have laid in a full supply of stimulants, camphor and hartshorn and hope to survive the shock of their perusal.
