PERHAPS we did not sufficiently impress our meaning, last issue, in regard to our advertisers. We meant that you should notice who advertise in this issue and give them your trade.

VISIONS of a new chapel building flit before the eyes of the faculty as they watch the late-comers hunt in vain for a seat and at last settle beside a pretty girl. The gallery-gods must soon be a regular part of the assembly.

THE various literary societies have been well attended this fall and their prospects are bright. This is as it should be. We might go on and give the usual advice to the new students, but have no doubt the "workers" for the various societies have already whispered in the ears of said newcomers all that it is necessary to say.

To those who would criticise our use of "Dr." before our engineer's name, we would say that the number of doctors in our faculty has become so alarmingly large that for fear of offending by omission we have decided to "doctor" every official of the institution. It's a little irregular but will be safest in the long run. Then all hail, Doctor Johannes Gruen!

It is always well for students to appreciate the quality and standing of the institution they attend. Therefore we print the following extract from a letter to one of our faculty, written by a state entomologist and a man noted in natural history circles. He says, "I do not wonder, from what I hear of Nebraska University, that you are pleased with the outlook. It seems to be clearly in the lead west of the Mississippi—which is to say that it is in advance of many similar institutions on this side of the river." Coming as this does entirely unsought and unexpected, it is very gratifying. May we all aid in making the University to take the place it is surely destined to attain.

THE completion of Nebraska Hall, making a separate home for the sciences and their devotees, separates the students of the various departments more than ever. This tendency has its bad effects. One of the great objects of a college education is to broaden the mind of the student. The association with those of kindred tastes and pursuits only, tends i.e.
