LINCOLN, August 26. Yesterday I walked the streets all day; and, strange as it may seem, enjoyed it; Generally, walking the streets is a bore, and besides, one cannot help but think that other people carry the notion that he is trying to make himself conspicuous. 1 esterday, however, no such thought as that troubled us, and every person that we met seemed to take an unusual interest in our welfare, for as best we can remember, every person was a man, and he was a candidate for the Legisla-We know many great and meet them every day, who do not speak to us, but yesterday they would grasp our hand so cordially, speak of our fu-ture prospects so kindly, that we thought, never again shall we be in want of a friend. One heavy (averdupois) man who was striving to be one of the two that should drop the much coveted ballot for U. S. Senator on behalf of a portion of the people of this representative district, and who had not even "nodded at us" since he was last a candidate, almost embraced us and eagerly asked of our family. We have no family, but had not time to explain, so told him that they were well, and hue, and handing us a ticket he moved majestically on. Thus the day passed. When night came all were satisfied as to the result, without counting the tickets, but the formality was gone through with, proving that Kennard had again triumphed. A. K. White for the House, and C. C. Burr for the Senate, are as good as nominated, while Hastings and Funke will have a lively fight before either will be contented to see the other the colleague of White. This, probably, secures three votes for Tom Kennard for U. Senator, which makes him very happy. Candidates were as thick grasshoppers in Minnesota, and the downcast look of the disappointed ones remind us of the bare stalks in a cornfield after being deserted by the destroyers that recently left
