Correspondence of The Bee.

Cheyenne, Wyo., April 24.—On coming into this town we were completely surprised while riding over the broad expanse of prairie lying between here and Sidney, without seeing a house, save the station house, we thought we had crossed the boundary line of settlements, but on arriving here, and finding instead of a little town of 5,000 people, with small, inferior business houses scattered over a broad waste of land, a city of over 5,000 inhabitants, compactly built, with large and imposing brick blocks, broad streets and nicely graded, sidewalks in the finest condition, the entire city showing such evidence of wealth as is found in but few of our Western towns.
