a rapid change, if any at all, from grain growing to wool production in this locality. I note no material change in condition of wools. Though rather milder than the average, the past winter was generally favorable for feeding, and flocks came through in fair condition, and the yield per head will be good. There seems a growing tendency among flock owners to shear "in the dirt"-i. e., without washing. This may show an apparent increase in yield, while the actual amount remains unchanged. Many wool growers are disposed to hold their wools awhile, in the hope that the recent decline in prices may be restored. The recollection that the advance of last year benefitted those who purchasad, rather than these who grew the wool, encourages this course. There are some movements for increase of flocks, and establishing new ones. This is especially true of Missouri, a state pecul arly adapted to come next, probably, and reveral enterprises are on foot in Nebraska. There is certainly no reason for expecting any such craze, however, as sometimes overtakes and turns the heads of our people.
