THE RAILROAD EMPIRE.

Empires are built by slow advances They do not spring into existence in a day or a year. Originating in minor despotisms they gradually grow into power and strength by absorbing their neighbors until a number of our State. Any information connected with smaller and weaker powers are weldtreelections, and relating to floods, accidents, ed into one united whole, capable of defying the assaults of the most powerful. Such has been the history of centralized imperialism all the world over. Such has been the history o corporate monopolies in the United States. Forty years ago railroad aggression was the last evil dreamed of by our people, Corporations were then humbly sueing for chargrants from the and

> The growth of the railreads in the United States has been one of the most marvelous developments of this country. From the coast of the Atlantic to the Pacific slope a net work of rails has spread itself into all sections of the land. For a time the people watched with pleasure these indications of enterprise. They fossubsidies of money and grants of lands. Individual cities, towns and counties mortgaged their property to offer new inducements to railroad capitalists. Competing lines were cordially welcomed, and in the increase of railroads the people thought they had found the true remedy for the avarice and grasping ambition of the great capitalists.
