In a certain State street concert saloon, where dizzy serio-comic, sentimental, and motto songsters warble nightly to the clink of the beer glass, a fiddle and rickety piano, there lives a monkey. This monkey is the conspicutus figure of a zoological collection confined in a small cage, consisting of a small bear, a bulldog, a rac coon, and another monkey, a female, the partner of his joys and his sorrows. The monkey is familiarly spoken of as you, pap, till you 'fessed 'ligion. I "Jim." "Jim" is about two and a half | wanted the nag, you know." feet high, and is a tolerably muscular specimen. During his past career his associations have been more aristocratic than at present, having been frequently the king pin of a den in a traveling circus. Since his arrival in the State street garden, either owing to the discordant noises of the place or the underbred companions he is compelled to herd with, his temper has been anything but amisble. He has shown an alarming partiality for the fingers, noses and ears of those who come within reach of his teeth, and yesterday morning about 8 o'clock he varied the monotony of his existence by going on a rampage, thoroughly alarming the women and children in the vicinity and transporting the juvenile male population into a haven of delight. The cage door happened to be open

Between Harry and 'Jim" relations not of the most friendly character had existed, the former having frequently belabored the latter for certain offenses committed. BONNER'S HORSES. TIME OF EDWIN FORREST AND RARUS COMPARED WIEH THAT OF MAUD S.

AND ST. JULIEN.

Of the many fast trotters owned by Mr. Bonner the fastest undoubtedly are Edwin Forrest and Rarus, the former having equalled and the latter beaten 2:11% in a private trial under five different watches. They were driven by John Murphy, the trainer | be and driver who sent Dexter to his best time. In speaking of the performances of the horses to a New York World reporter recently, Mr. Murphy said that late last fall he drove For rest and Rarus a mile on Mr. Bonner's three-quarter track, Forrest going the distance in 2:111, and Rarus in 2:111. That was soon after Mr. Bonner purchased Rarus at Hartford and withdrew him from the track. Mr Murphy says that both horses are in better ondition now than they were then and fully able to repeat that performance, if not to excel it. Euher of them, he thinks, under favorable circumstances, can do 2:10, and, he adled, "I don't think there is another horse living can do it." Although Rarus has beaten Edwin Forrest a quarter of a second, Murphy considers Forrest the faster of the two, and gives it as his opinion that orrest can give Rarus the odds and beat him the best two in three heats. Maud S., while working on the track at Charter Oak rark, was speeded a quarter of a mile in 0.314, or at the howling mob.
