RAIL RECORD.

The Wabash and Burlington Roads Looking Towards Omaha.

Departure of the Oakes Ames Monument Expedition. The party of railway magnates, who came in from the east yesterday, were joined at this point to-day by Director Fred L. Ames, accompanied by Hon. Charles Francis Adams and others, and the entire company, with some of the local officials, left at noon to-day for Sherman.

They traveled in a special train, consisting of the Union Pacific directors' car and special office car No. 12, which was newly painted and upholstered for the occasion. Conductor Pratt and Engineer Livingston ran the special train, which pulled out soon after the departure of the regular overland train.

A prominent gentleman on intimate terms with leading officials of both roads, said to our reporter to-day that in his opinion, it would be but a few days until the C., B. & Q. and Wabash roads would both be running their passenger trains into Omaha. "I think," said he, "that the Burlington train will run in first, but there will not be many days difference."

He declined to say anything further, but from the fact that the contest between the rival lines continues so strong, and that the president, vice president, general manager and other officials of Wabash arrived here last evening, it looks as though there might be something in the rumor. The results of such a move would be of immense moment in many respects.

Business on the various roads is picking up fast, and promises to be very heavy this fall. Plans have been received at the office in this city, for the foundation of the new St. Paul and Omaha depot. It will be situated on the northwest corner of Fourteenth and Webster streets, with the principal frontage on Fourteenth. The plans contemplate a brick building in the form of a rectangle 32 by 120 feet. The gentleman's waiting room, 18 by 32 feet, occupies the south end. Adjoining this is the office 13 by 30 feet. In front of the office is the ladies' waiting room, 17 by 30 feet, the baggage room adjoins the ladies' room. The north part of the building is designed for the freight house, 32 by 60 feet. A passenger track runs along the Fourteenth street front, and the freight track lies along the west or rear side.

RULO.

A Little Town With One of the Largest and Most Complete Mills and Elevators in the State.

Correspondence of the Bee. RULO, September 26.-I had the rare foresight and judgment to arrange matters so as to ride on the freight train from Falls City to Rulo. Freight trains are sometimes behind time. This one was; so that I and the fat drummer who was my fellow-passenger, were permitted to walk away about an hour and a half lounging about the luxuriant and cool seats in the depot, or strolling around the platform, among the treacherous trucks and corpses that were piled up (three deep). These latter, the fat drummer, who was travelling for a liquor firm, insisted were only beer-kegs; and no unpious was he to all logical deduction, that he refused to call them corpses even after I pointed out to him that they were but the corporeal remains of departed spirits; but the train came at last and boarding it, we were whirled away at the dizzy rate of eight miles an hour, reaching Rulo Y about 3 o'clock p. m. Rulo is about two miles from the Y, on the bank of the Missouri. The back from the town does not come to the freight, but I was fortunate enough to catch a ride to town. Several orchards pruned on our road to town showed that fruit raising is an important business here. My friend with whom I rode "traded" several fine apples, after carefully looking up and down the road and remarking that the owner wouldn't care, as he bought lots of apples from him. A great variety of fruit is raised on the sandy soil of these hills, and considerable wine is manufactured. With 500 inhabitants, Rulo has four saloons, and drinking spirituous liquors seems to be as much of a custom here as at "The Corner."

I was much surprised on entering town as my eye fell on a large elevator and large brick flouring mill. Accordingly after depositing my baggage at the hotel I proceeded to pay these buildings a visit. Mr. Malones, the manager, showed me over the establishment, answering my many questions with politeness and care. The mill is two stories high above the basement, brick, with four runs of stone, and everything new and neat. They are making a good article of flour and ship to Omaha, Lincoln and Plattsmouth. The elevator is large and very complete in its appointments. It has three "dumps" where the grain is unloaded. Corn on the cob is dumped here and goes at once to a sheller that has a capacity of 450 bushels an hour. Corn and cobs together are carried to the third story where they are separated; the corn drops through the perforations in a large sheet iron cylinder and the cobs go out of it and are carried to the furrow iron and used for fuel. A small mountain of them has accumulated. A track runs from the Y up to this elevator. The elevator has been completed for only about two months, and in that time 130 car loads of shelled corn had been shipped. Scales in the elevator weigh a car load at a time. There is stored at present about 5,000 or 10,000 bushels of wheat here, which will be ground and shipped as flour. Messrs. Hooford & Gagnon, the owners, have also a large stock of corn merchandises, and about 6,000 acres of improved lands in this vicinity.

Mr. H. Miles, proprietor of one of the other general merchandise stores in the place, and Jones & Son, are just opening up the other side, secured the Bee as an indispensable part of their establishment.

Rulo has hopes that the B. and M. will cross the Missouri there and run to its terminus on the other side, Bigelow, which is only about ten miles from the river. This hope is based on the fact that the assistant superintendent came down the other side with another man, and went out and examined the approach to the river, with some care.

FIRING THE FEMALES.

How the City Officials of a Rural Town Get in Their Work.

As stated a few days ago, the mayor and his police force in Lincoln have been after the loose women of that town, with the determination to drive them out. This was done by order of the city council, and there seems to be no doubt but it will result in a general exodus from the state capital in the direction of adjoining cities including Omaha, where cyprians are not prosecuted but rather petted.

Of course the women are making a square fight, and yesterday five of them were released from the county jail on a writ of habeas corpus, heard before the county judge. The point on which their liberty was regained was that the warrant of commitment was directed to the keeper of the city jail, and that therefore it could not be held that the placing of the prisoners in the custody of Ensign, keeper of the county jail, was legal, as within the scope of the mittimus issued by the police judge.

Although the session laws of 1879 permit the county jail to be used by the city authorities, the judge decided that the court could not hold to be a city jail within the meaning of the mittimus until so constituted by specific act of the city council, and discharged the prisoners from custody.

The Journal says of the case: "The victory of the women over the police court can only be temporary. The mandate of the executive is that the houses of prostitution must close, and if the inmates are again permitted the keeper of the county jail will doubtless have previously been endorsed by ample authority to receive and hold any and all committed offenders against the city ordinance. Certain of the houses have closed their doors already and the inmates have retired into vicarious seclusion, with the idea that the storm will soon blow over; but we mistake the temper of the present administration if the social evil is again permitted to rear its brazen head in the immediate past. All departments are now working harmoniously and if the vice is not wholly exterminated, it is a foregone conclusion that a stringent repressing power is constantly impending over them and a wholesome restraint exercised that will eventually prevent the usurpation of power from reaching its former prominence and flaunting assurance in our midst."
