T., is in jail for stealing and returning government horses. A large amount of stolen property is recovered from second-hand dealers, yet there are no "fences" in town. A young Bohemian girl who has been in the city but five months, Friday filed a complaint charging a young countryman with bastardy. In the police court yesterday one drunk paid one dollar and costs. A boy who was caught peddling without license, went to jail in default of $2 and costs. The mass meeting for the "Home for the Friendless" has been postponed until the action of the city council on the latter petition is ascertained. That body has adjourned for two weeks. The jury assembled in the United States court yesterday only to be discharged for the term. A few equity cases will be disposed of and court will probably adjourn in three or four days. A blockman at Fourth packing house, had the first finger of his right hand cut off with a cleaver Thursday. He was taken to Bell's drug store, where Dr. Darrow amputated the finger at the second joint. The old and reliable Pioneer Drug Store of Omaha has the finest assortment of rich Holiday Goods ever brought to the city, and invites everybody to call early and see them, Ish & McMahon, proprietors. The morning of the last day of the year will be a dark one. There will be an eclipse of the sun on that morning. The sun will rise partially eclipsed by the moon, the obscuration continuing for over an hour. The funeral of Mr. Malcolm McIntosh will take place from his late residence on South Tenth street on Saturday, at 1:30 p. m., under the auspices of the Masonic order, of which he was a member. Sully went on the track Thursday morning at 6 o'clock and made his fifty miles without an effort. He is showing large crowds, and says his late walk at the Grand Central Billiard Hall put him in good trim instead of tiring him. Truly "a thing of beauty is a joy forever," at least so thought a Birn man yesterday, when, dropping in at the jewelry establishment of Edholm & Erickson, he was shown a beautiful silver chain, watch fob, gold lined and ornamented with the finest engraving ever executed on a piece of precious metal. None but an artist of the highest order could design a piece of workmanship as fine as this. The newspaper man said the watch fob was "a talker," but when he was told that the price was $210, he fainted and was carried out. W. J. Mount, of this city, has received a circular notice of the mysterious disappearance of Mr. John Beckwith, of Racine, Wis., who left home September 28th, with $1000 cash to purchase a farm in the northwest. Since his departure no tidings have been received of him, and it is believed that he has either been foully dealt with or that some mental disorder has clouded his reason, the latter being the theory of his friends, as he was subject to fits of disappointment and absent-mindedness. He was a member of the lodge, chapter and commandery, at Racine, by whom the search is being made. His full description may be obtained of Mr. Mount. Companies, societies or private individuals wishing to purchase something suitable for a present, will find at Edholm & Erickson's, Fifteenth street, opposite the Postoffice, a line of rare and valuable presents, now in stock, and if not on hand will be made to order on short notice and executed in the best possible manner. A TRAGEDY AVERTED.

An Amusing Result of an Omaha Woman's Jealousy. Pistols for One, Grip Sacks for Two. A few days since a merchant of Omaha, who by the way has a very jealous wife, was called west on business, to be gone two or three weeks. His wife, who usually accompanied him on such trips, was not inclined this time, and her suspicious were aroused the moment her husband started. About ten days after the gentleman, on leaving his hotel in his hurry to catch a train, forgot his satchel. When he reached the next town he immediately wrote the landlord to have the baggage forwarded to him. But through some mistake it was sent direct to this city. A few days after this, as the jealous wife sat imagining all sorts of wicked things about her absent lord, a boy put in his appearance and said that Mr. X. had sent in his satchel and wanted to know if he should bring it to the house or leave it at the store. "Bring it down at once," said Mrs. X., in surprise, "I wonder what it means? Maybe John has been murdered by the Indians." And the heart of the good woman softened, and she determined to banish all thoughts of the green-eyed monster. When the satchel arrived she took it at once to her room, and setting it down in a corner, turned to go out. But she halted at the door and said, "Now I wonder if John hasn't sent something—a present, or a note; or maybe he has sent in his washing to have it sent to the laundry. Anyhow, I believe I ought to open it and see." She got down on her knees and examined the fastenings; it was firm and would not budge. She was more anxious than ever now, and tried to open it. She finally managed to break the lock with a pair of shears, and the satchel sprang open. She at once began to empty it of its contents; various articles of soiled wearing apparel were carefully laid on one side with two boxes of cards, a half pint bottle full of a reddish looking fluid, and several other similar articles. She was near the bottom now and was examining everything carefully, when she came across an old memorandum book. She eagerly seized it, when she dropped the picture of a beautiful young lady. She scanned the strange face a moment, and laying it to one side commenced turning the leaves of the book. She soon found a letter written in a lady's hand, which began, "My Darling John," and ended "Your Loving Carrie." The lady was on the war-path now, and divided down into the old grip-sack for new discoveries and found another letter, in which the impudent Carrie had dared to call John—her John—"darling pet, love," etc. This was too much for the delicate nerves of Mrs. X. She rose with blood in her eye. She made up her mind to go up town and purchase a dose of arsenic, wait till her husband returned, and then, after telling him all, swallow the fatal dose in his presence. But before she reached the store she glanced over one of the letters and changed her mind, and turning round, entered a gun shop and purchased a seven-shooter instead. Returning home, she packed the satchel just as she had found it, and started for the depot. Mr. X., at his hotel smoking a fragrant Havana, deeply absorbed in his own thoughts when the door suddenly opened and Mrs. X., stood before him. The man was speechless, but with an effort led the way to the sitting room. Once inside the lady closed the door and confronting her husband said, "I have brought you your satchel John." She spoke in a stage whisper, her eyes flaming and her form erect. John was dumfounded and silent. But the wronged wife put the satchel on a table and began unpacking it, just as she had done once before, and said, "Now John, I am about to prove to you that I know you to be a guilty man." "Why my dear," said John, who had partly recovered from the first shock. "How on earth did you get my satchel? I left it at Hastings and ordered it forwarded here." Without deigning a reply, Mrs. X. exposed the picture and letters to the view of her husband, who all at once began to see light through darkness, and said, "Why, Mary, these are not my clothes, nor my memorandum, nor my satchel, nor the name here on the inside, and here, on this shirt, and in this book; why what are you driving at?" Poor Mrs. X.'s brain was in a whirl; she saw her mistake and wanted to die, but could. "I can't blame you," said Mrs. X., "and * * * * * They returned home the next day via Hastings and exchanged satchels. The couple think the story has been kept mum by those who knew it, but when they see this they will know better. Fresh Smoked Salmon, Halibut and Blotchers, Fleming & Co. I. O. O. F. FORTY ROD.

The Instrument by Which Death Took Away David Barker. Dying in Delirium. For about two months past a young man named David Barker has been employed as a runner for the Omaha house. He was about thirty-two years of age, and had served two years in the regular army of the United States, having been in Omaha only about a year. He was seriously addicted to drink and of late had been warned by his companions to desist or he would kill himself. He did not, however, heed the warning and his doom came as predicted. On Wednesday he made his usual trips to the trains, but was even then noticed to be not quite right in his head, and the tremors entering upon a spell of the tremors. Thursday he did not make his trip, but sat about the bar room all day, at times singing or making some unusual demonstration, which proved that he was growing worse. About 4 o'clock last evening he had become so bad that a doctor was sent for, and about the same time some of his friends started to carry him up stairs to bed. The doctor was not found immediately and had been it would seem to have been of no use, for on his way up stairs, the poor fellow died in the arms of those who carried him. He was laid on his bed as it did not seem possible that he had gone so suddenly, but in a few minutes it was evident that there was no human aid that could avail in his case. Coroner Jacobs was notified and at once removed the remains to his undertaking rooms on Farnham street, where it was at first thought that an inquest would be held. On investigation, however, the facts were so conclusive that it was not thought necessary to go to the expense of an inquest. The remains will be buried to-day. The deceased had no relatives in this part of the country, but is said to have connections in Baltimore, Maryland. His death is another instance of the infallible result of a long course of hard drinking, his habit probably having been acquired in the army and kept up ever since. Zwickback at Fleming's. A NOONDAY FIRE,

Which Came Near Cooking the Antiquarian Book-Store's Goose. A Fireman's Narrow Escape. About noon to-day a fire broke out in the roof of the Antiquarian book store, on Farnham, near Twelfth street, catching from a stovepipe which ran clear up through the roof. An alarm was rung from box 5, and the engines which were pumping on the streets being already at hand, the hose was merely uncoupled and the nozzle attached, and a stream was on the fire at the second tap of the bell. A small portion of the roof was damaged, not exceeding $25 in value, and stock of books injured to the extent of $150. The latter is insured with Murphy & Lovett for $1,000. In running to the fire Asst. Chief Kyle fell in trying to get on the Hook and Ladder truck, and was slightly bruised. He had a narrow escape from serious injury. Chief Engineer Calligan informs us that by 6:00 clock this evening every cistern in the city will be full. The department threw 13,500 barrels of water on the big fire Tuesday night, since which time they have been constantly at work filling up the various cisterns. RATHER RAPID. It is a remarkable fact that men will suddenly become color blind on leaving church and take a brown silk umbrella and leave a gingham one. Other parties will go and select handsome holiday presents at Kuhn & Co.'s, leaving an exceedingly small amount of money instead. There you can find every style of Celluloid Sets, which are sold at prices guaranteed to be the lowest line of odor cases ever shown in this city, bought of a house packed for ready cash and sold at extremely low.
