Liberty Lingers on the Outer

Correspondence of The Bee.
LINCOLN, Neb., January 22.—The Nebraska state penitentiary is situated on a tract of land embracing one thousand acres, about three miles south of Lincoln. The walls of this institution enclose between seven and eight acres, while the balance of the land is leased for the purpose of farming. Forty convicts are employed on the farm, and in the one item of corn, over 800 bushels were cribbed this fall. This is fed to the stock, which consists of three hundred cattle, as many hogs, and about fifty horses.

Through the courtesy of Mr. T. A. Graham, steward, I was taken behind the bars, and shown everything worth seeing. Upon entering the reception room every visitor is required to register his name. Very often the registers show over 100 persons to have visited the institution in one day.

The wall surrounding the institution is twenty feet high, nine feet at the base and six feet at the top. On each corner is a guard tower. There is also a balcony on the south wall of the cellhouse. There are guard posts constant watch. There are twenty guards employed. There are two hundred and seventy-two prisoners in the institution. The first shop visited was that of the stone-cutters. In this shop there are twenty men at work. They are making the stone for the new capital. He is small stature, and clean shaven, looks anything but the chief desperado of the Nebraska frontier. In the harness shop, twenty-five men are employed, who turn out ten dozen collars and five sets of harness a day. These goods are sold largely to Omaha salaried men. In the broom factory, eight men are employed, and the capacity is twenty dozen brooms per day. Adjoining this room is the stocking factory, where seventy-five pairs of woolen stockings are knit per day by means of patent machines. In the utility shop, fifteen men are employed, making all kinds of farm machinery, etc. The tailor shop employs thirty men, and the laundry about fifteen.

I have noted the various departments of work that an idea may be formed of how the convicts are employed. It is a matter of note that the prisoners are all stout, healthy looking men, and very rarely put on the sick list. The most interesting feature of the pen is the cell house, which contains 320 cells. They are arranged in a row in the center of a room 10x50 feet in dimensions, leaving a passage-way about ten feet wide between the outer walls and the cell walls, on all sides. At present there are only two stories of cells, but next summer the lease will double this number, making 640 cells in all. I saw the convicts quit work and file into their dreary quarters, it being 5:30 o'clock in the evening, the usual time for supper. As the door of a cell was opened, I saw a man of a bell the long lines being issued from the several shops, each convict walking with his hands resting on the shoulders of the men in front of him. At the door of the cell house each prisoner takes two slices of bread, a cup of coffee (and occasionally pudding) and goes directly to his cell. The count is made after each meal. A keeper goes to each cell and calls the number of it, the occupant being required to stand with his hand and face against the bars of the door and answer to his call. Half past eight is the hour for reading to bed. At half past nine in the morning the roll call for the convicts to get up, and breakfast is served at six. The usual fare for breakfast is potatoes, meat, coffee and bread, and for dinner a variety of vegetables in addition. During the summer better is given at every meal.

A library of 1,600 volumes is kept for the use of the convicts. Their letters are given them once a week also. I did not mention the chapel, a large room in the main building, where the gospel is preached to the prisoners. Of this room is the warden's office, where the record of each prisoner is given upon entrance into the pen, his photograph taken, and his name exchanged. I looked over these photographs. There were some very pleasant faces among them, but others looked mean and ugly. The newspaper bill. Among the questions asked a new comer, is: "What are your politics?" A member of the party of visitors asked the clerk which was one of the two great political parties was best represented.

"The republican party," was the reply.
"Well," said the visitor, "that certainly don't speak well for our party. I always gave the republicans greater credit than that."
I informed him that the bad element of our party was all in jail, while the majority of the democrats had been convicted.

Jay Gould's Adulteration as a Bear.
Jay Gould had $300,000,000 in money September 1, 1873, and was then prepared to hammer the market down to a level that would bring through all the rest. On the 5th of September he appeared in the exchange and began work. He first attacked gold, $300,000,000 was sold in one day by himself and his associates. The price fell 7 cents, giving Gould an enormous profit. He looked up his profits and his capital, and turned attention to the list of stocks that had already weakened from 10 to 15 per cent, in sympathy with his daring and bold. Disturbances general, all holders were shaken out, timid ones sold out, and many strong operators ranged under Gould's leadership. Western Union was the next object of assault. He sold 40,000 shares short, and then bought them, tumbling ten cents in one hour, clearing Gould a half a million in sixty minutes. This was on the 18th of September, and by noon the market had fallen to ten cents. On the next day the steepest stocks dropped like lead, and the stanchest house collapsed. By 3 p. m. there had been a loss of $100,000,000 in value since morning, and money was worth 5 per cent a day. Gould flitted like a vulture, through the black and sickening scenes, buying miserably any stock that showed signs of vitality. The next day the banks suspended, and at 12 the Stock Exchange closed doors—and the panic had settled upon the country. It seemed im-
