AGRICULTURAL

Making Pork without Corn. Since the development of the great corn region of the northwest the production of pork has fallen off in other portions of the country.

The feeling is general that farmers who do not produce corn in large quantities cannot compete in the production of pork with those who can.

During the past year attempts have been made in various parts of the country to raise hogs without the use of corn, and to fatten them by feeding only a small amount of it.

In the north arctic hogs have been raised successfully, but in some parts of the south a considerable quantity of chufa has been produced.

More use has been made of clover pasture, and it is stated that were fed on apples owing to the great abundance of this fruit.

In the eastern states several farmers raise feed corn, cut it up while the stalks were green and sweet, and fed it to hogs.

In some cases clover was cured, moistened, and fed to growing hogs, and it is stated that this had also found that growing hogs would eat enlargo readily, especially that made of clover and red clover.

There is now a prospect that our large hogs will be generally employed for feeding stock hogs in different parts of the country.

For corn consumers now dependent on the west for their corn, the fact that less corn will be employed for pork production will increase in the south and east.
