Bulling the Hog Market. CHICAGO, March 17-1 a. m. -British Vice-Consul Warrock, of Chicago, was questioned in regard to the statement of his minister that he furnished Vice-Consul Orump, at Philadelphia, information on which he based the report that 500,000 hogs died of cholera in Illinois during 1880. Mr. Warrock did not deny that he had furnished the information to Mr. Crump, but of its nature he refused to state, as also the source from which he obtained it. He, however, volunteered the statement to a reporter that he thought Mr. Crump's report would be found very nearly correct. He didn't think it was disputed by any-body but the "bulls," and there were quite as many "bears" as "bulls." There was nothing in Mr. Crump's report to frighten the pork men, and all the excitement over it was caused by the fight between the "bulls" and "bears." Consumers are interested chinae.

Aaron Burr and Mrs Bamilton. When on an official visit to the United States in 1853 I spent a day or two at Mr. Stuart Browne's place on the New Jersey shore of the Hudson river, above Hoboken. General Taylor, of Ohlo, was another guest, and as the house was at no great distance from the spot where the fatal duel between Burr and Hamilton took place (July 12, 1804), a conversation arose on the event, and the characteristics, public and private, of the two men. Gen. Taylor told us that when a very young man studying at West Point, he was one day on board a river boat, and among the passengers were Mrs. Hamilton, widow of Alexander Hamilton, and Aaron Burr, who had returned to the states after his enforced absence in Europe in consequence of his proved treasonable practices. Burr was then an old man, but still retained much of his former confidence and manner, especially with ladies. To the astonishment of those who knew him, on discovering that Mrs.- Hamilton was on board the steamboat, he approached her, took off his hat, and, bowing, said, "Mrs. Hamilton, I believe. My name is Borr." The effect on the lady, now well stricken in years, was elec tric. Rising from her seat, she gath ered up her dress, as if to touch Burr would be contamination, drew herself Best straight 10c Cigar in the city, up, and, looking at him from head to foot, swept away with a dignity and grace worthy of her best days, and left him standing abashed, if he were capable of feeling so, before the spec-tsters. Burr replaced his hat upon his head, and slowly moved back to the seat he had left purposely to make this experiment upon the feelings of the widow of the man he had slain, for one cannot believe that he had any intention to apologize or explain, since this was impossible.
