who is now 84 years of age. If it does not kill him it will be likely to so far weaken him that he will lose control of the government. In either case the known hostility of the brown prince to Bismarck and his policy will nullify all influence of the latter. He, as a controller of the policy of Germany, will cease to exist. This, however, will not effect the cordial relations between Austria and Germany. The Austro Germans and the Germans of the empire are one family and one people, while the Magyars, or Hungarians, are more bitterly hostile to the Slavs than the Irish to the English. So there is no chance of any separation or hostility between the two great Germanic empires. They will fight together if the war comes.

With her millions poorly paid people paying tribute out of their earnings to the 2,000 families who own the entire country; with these millions educated as they are, and thoroughly awake to the oppres sions they suffer, and with the loss of prestige she has encountered at the hands of Bismarck during the last she has encountered at the few years, it is hard to see what she will do. She will probably try and keep out of the fight-try to keep neutral. But that will be impossible. The disturbance in her own borders will compel her to enter the fight to distract the attention of her people. Moreover, there is her traditional policy of either keeping control of Constantinople, or, at least, not allowing Russia to control it. No; I
