When the weighman at the U. P. oal shed on Thirteenth street, near Leavenworth, reached the office Saordsy-a small building near the shed—he found to his surprise that the door was ajar. Estering he observed that the outer safe door was open and shattered. A quick examination revealed the fact that the burglars had not succeeded in making their way through the inner door, which they had penetrated with s drill to the depth of about half an inch. The only other trace of their risit was a broken drill on the floor. It was found they had entered the outer door by drilling just above the combination and inserting powder had blown the outer door oper shattering the entire inside portion of it. This accomplished they had renoved the knob and rim from the nner door and attempted to drill through this door, which is composed of alternate layers of chilled iron and steel, and constitutes the burglar proof portion of the safe. The office till, which the burglars had opened, contained only a piece of 25 cent scrip, which the burglars had left. The only article taken was a revolver, which was in the outer portion of the
