hunting them like wild animals, burning the wigwams and leaving death and desolation in his track. Many were the red fiends that fell victime to his unerring rifle. He fought in any capacity offered. He would at one time be at the head of a band of Indians who were at war with the Apaches, then again he would muster up a body of Mexicans or whites and go on the war path, thirsting for vengence. The principal part of his fight-ing was done under Kit Carson, and he was an associate of Bill Bent, St. Vrain, Maxwell and others of a dke stamp. From the time of the death of his wife he led a roving life, was off to every new discovery, and wherever he could be of use to white men. He came to this valley about thirty years ago, and described it as being the finest country he ever saw. All along the Rio Graude and on the smaller streams game of all kinds abounded, and the Indian roamed at will and was monarch of all he surveyed. Colonel Pfeiffer participated in the fight between the Utes and whites on . 15 Embargo creek, near where he finally located permanently, and he also took an active part in that terrible battle on South Fork, in this country, in which so many Indians and whites were slain He was Indian agent for some time t -----, and maintained more friendly relations with the San Juan Utes than any white man, and is speken of among them to-day as Ta'a Pfeiffer. For some years he has lived on pension of twenty dollars a month, being the pension of a disabled cap-tain, on account of bullet and arrow wounds, having no less than seventeen scars to show for his valor. His rank of colonel was acquired with the First New Mexican volunteer cavalry, where he distinguished himself in fighting the Texans, especially in the gattle of Valverdes, on the Rio Grande, on the county of Socorro. Like most soldiers, he never managed to acquire much wealth, and has left his financial affairs in a state of embarrassment. Having done good service to his country, he was certainly deserving of a greater pension than he was in receipt of, but such men are seldom appreciated until the country for which they have tought has become settled, and in numbering the hardy pioneers they get after death the praise they should have had while living. It is very unfortunate that an accurate history of this sturdy pioneer's life was not written while he yet lived, as much that is valuable can never be obtained through any other source. Who could blame him for COLD CLIMATE. Mr. R H. Haines, of New Jersey, n the Mi. wank e Sentinel. The raspberry is a favorite fruit with many persons, and the reason why it is so is very evident. As the plants require only about the same cultivation as ordinary field corn, and needs very little hand weeding, it is it in his pocket, and when he reached possible for almost any person to easiy grow them, and at an expenditure of only a small amount of time. Many horticulturists throughout the country have been experimenting of late years, hoping to obtain new varieties of raspberries that will combine more good qualities than are possessed by the older sorts. Some of these experiments have been quite successful, and many fruit growers perisnee of that nature?" are now availing themselves of the advantages to be found in growing these new varieties. A quality that has been very much desired has been that of hardiness in the plants. Though there is scarcely a raspberry that can be said to be perfectly letter from the prospective bride to hardy, yet some of the new sorts appear to withstand much greater er. tremes of heat and cold than was formerly the case, with the exception werhaps of the Turner. Then there are other five varieties that give such delicious fruit that they are well worthy of the little trouble that may be incurred in giving the plants winter protection. The Florence will be appreciated by many persons, as being a novelty, in country would arrive at Castle Garden that the fruit is yellow, while the next day, and he intended to go down plants have the habit of growth and hardiness of the black cap raspberries.
