DECORATION DAY.

ingly called the country of celebration and anniversaries. The truth of this charge may perhaps be admitted. Few nations, within the compass of three cenerations have had such an eventindebted to the result of great events for their national exisform of government which they be should desire to recall the scenes and the heroes of the great struggle. If the past, is not to be wondered at. But among all the recurring anni versaries of our national life there is none which appeals so strongly to the memory or touches more tenderly the emotions of every American than that of Decoration Day. It is no anniversary for fulsome eulogies of fortune favored heroes whose names are em blazoned high on the temple of Fame It is a day on which a grateful nation pays a nation's homage to her honored dead, unmindful of rank or position, and only remembering that they gave up their life that the nation might live. Such an anniversary appeals to the noblest impulses of our nature; it awakens emotions which. aroused to action, are guarrantees of the perpetuation of the Republic and the homage and devotion of its citizens. The garlands of flowers which grateful hands have twined around the last resting places of the nation's heroes, are more than funeral wreaths and honors to the departed brave, whose memory lives though their labors have ended.
