Capt. May and a Party of Cattle Men Murdered in the Mountains and Their Cattle Stolen.

The Troops Being Hurried to the Scene, a Worse than Lava Bed War Before Them.

Chicago, June 26.—A Denver special gives the following alarming information: A Ute war seems inevitable. Gen. Hefferman, who has been acting as guide for the troops deployed on the southwestern border of the state, has arrived at Durango, bringing news of one of the bloodiest and most dangerous appropriate the conference between Commissioner Meacham and the White river Utes and most dangerons encounters between whites and Indians that has ocposed of renegade chiefs from the sevsierra la Sal and Blue mountains, to evade it from the first. Colorow was in charge at the agency when Meacham issued the call, and promised to dispatch runners for Douglas, Jack, Persu, and the chiefs, then out in the valley. He had instructed the couriers before departing, however, and when out of sight of the agency they returned to their quarters thus leaving the matter at a dead standstill. Another meeting was recently arranged for, and the to all the settlements to incite the inhabitants to war, and so successful had been the result that the troops were powerless to avert the trouble. Besides murdering the three men, the C company of the Thirteenth infantry, a mounted detail, advanced by way of Chicken creek to Adarnel's ranche, in the Sierra Abajo, and went into camp. Adarnel's cabin and that of a settler were found abandoned and rifled of their contents. Here the troops awaited the coming of the settlers. On the night of June 3, fiftythree chapters are published to-day, the remainder being promised from day to day until complete. In to-days chapter the detective hints three companions states of a score expedition, climbing to the summit of the Blue Mountain and penetrating to the very heart of the renegades stronghold. The Indians, taking alarm at their approach, fled in detail, some, however, remaining and building a barricade. That night—the 4th—the settlers advanced, led by Wm. May, a brother of one of the men murdered at Thurman's ranche. The party consisted of PORTY-NINE MEN, WELL ARMED and accompanied by eight pack mules. The remaining six were left at Adarnell's to guard the supplies. Being out of rations the troops abandoned the field on the following day, retreating to the big bend of the Dolores. Next day twelve Indians appeared on a mound near Adarnell's cabin, waying a flag of truce. They were allow-ed to advance, and stated that they were on their way to the Uncomphagre agency. A scout on their trail, how ever, showed that they had circled after getting out of sight and fellowed the trail of May and his party. In the meantime the company of settlers had discovered a band of Indians driving a large herd of horses, and kept on their trail until they had made a circuit of the south and west sides of the Blue mountains in pursuit. The beef supply was inadequate, and two men were detailed to go into the moun-tains and cut out a steer from one of the herds ranging there. While engaged in so doing the men heard a shot, and riding into the open ground discovered eight Indians. Their first impulse was to retreat to their command, but the Indians, seeing their intention,

THE SCENE OF THE MASSACRE is about 125 miles west of Durango in Utah. The experiences of the Modoc will be repeated in an enlarged form if the war continues, at the stronghold of the Pah Utes in the Sierra la Sol and Blue mountains, much more form-idable than was the lava beds. The country is almost entirely unknown, because of its isolation, and is one labyrinth of caverns and an interminable nest of yawning canons and im-passable mountains. The Pah Uter are a desperate band of wild young bucks who have deserted the command of the agency chiefs. They are as free as the air, have no families to

States,

The most important bulletin, from commercial point of view, that has yet been issued by the census bureau is that which embraces the statistics of grain production of the states and territories, with the number of acres under cultivation for each kind of grain, and the comparison of quantities with the census of 1870. From these tables, which are too long for publication in full in our columns, it appears that the production or Indian corn has increased more than 1.000,000,000 bushels in ten years, that of wheat 172,000,000 bushels, of oats 123,000,000 bushels, and of barley 15,000,000 bushels. The production of rye and buckwheat shows a slight increase. Illinois continues to lead as a grain-growing state, show-ing the largest yield of corn, wheat and oats. Iowa comes next as a corngrowing state, and Indiana and Ohio are only a little behind as wheat producers. Kansas and Nebraska show the greatest increase during the decade in both corn and wheat, while Minnesota, Dakota, Oregon and Washington show very large percentages of increase in the latter staple. California produces more than onefourth of the barley crop of the United States, 12,500,000 bushels; New York comes next with nearly 8,000,-000 bushels. The growth of wheat shows some diminuition in the decade in the states of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont. The totals are as foilows:
