A Specimen Bridge.

The bridge crossing the creek at Eighteenth and Cuming streets is in a terrible condition and calls for immediate attention of the city authorities. The approaches are terrible. When a street car is passing a margin of about two-feet space is allowed to pedestrians, and this walk is conveniently pierced with holes large enough to allow one to drop fifteen feet below in the darkness. The bridge is a model structure in its way and as a monument of dilapidation could scarcely be improved upon.
