sowing time approaching, and the majority of them without a furrow turned for the crop. It is stated by some farmers that the fall sowing will not be much more than one-tenth of the usual average. When the harvest was over it was too dry and hard to commence plowing for wheat. They have been waiting ever since for rain and they are waiting still. The scarcity of feed incident to this drought is beginning to be a serious question with farmers who own much or even little stock. It will be almost impossible for the fall pasturage to afford any relief as without steady and copious rains there will be no grass and it is unlikely that there will be rain.

The price of all kinds of feed has advanced so materially that farmers cannot but it. The stock, therefore, must perish unless events take a very sudden turn. Very many small farmers in southern Illinois will suffer during the coming winter for the bare necessities of life.
