Turner Ball-

Last evening the Omaha Turner Society gave an entertainment, fol-lewed by a ball in Brandt's garden. There was a very large attendance. The principal features were gymnastic performances, and some amusing living statuary groups. A representation was also given of "Saxony in Prussia, or the Saxon Village School tention to get there or die, and he Master," in which Messrs. A dres and Lindemann and Miss Maria Thyssen sustained the principal characters. The rest of the evening was devoted in the dancing.

TWO OF A KIND.

An Irate Husband Who was Badly Paralyzed.

James Crowther came up from St.

Joe last evening to meet his wife, who was staying here so that together they might enjoy the two last days of the shouts of the spectators. On the back stretch Big Soap, who was evidently being driven to win not to lose, made another desperate effort to overtake the little bay, but he was popularly known as the Golden Gate or something of that sort. There his or something of that sort. There his under the wire on the finish of the wife lodged. He proceeded to her fourth heat winner of the race in the room without ceremony and pushing open the door stalked into the apartment. What was his astonishment to find there a couple of gentlemen be-sides the wife of his bosom. He He wasn't so surprised at their presence as at some of their peculiar antics. Mr. Crowther immediately proceeded to get mad. He expressed some rather harsh opinions of the gentlemen present and then began to throw off his spare clothing. Without pausing to consider the consequences he sailed in. The first thing he ran against was a fist which caught him under the chin and Mr. Crowther stretched his manly form upon the carpet. Then the two men cheerfully met to work pounding him. After they had completely satisfied themselves they escaped. The awful racket they had raised attracted the attention of a policeman, who found Mr. Crowther in his room, and escorted him to the calaboose. Crowther says he knows the men and will have them arrested.

LAST NIGHT.

How it was Spent by Visitors to the City.

The disagreeable drizzling rain of last evening was not of a character to reassure pleasure-seeking visitors. The chill northers of the earlier part of the day abated little of their wintry vigor, and those people who could do so at such hasty notice resurrected their overcoats. Those of the attendants at the fair who thoughtlessly neglected to bring their overcoats with them were in a rather unpleasant plight. Every hotel in the city was filled to overflowing. The visitors generally had left the fair grounds immediately after Mrs. Burke's race, and poured into the city in large crowds. The hotels were besieged by hatter to buy a good hat, 218, 14th street.

Many young men especially, could secure neither rooms nor cots, and passed the night uncomfortably where they could in hotel chairs.

Notwithstanding the disagreeable rain there were a great many people upon the streets until a reasonably late hour. The majority of the visitors, however, retired early, tired out with sight seeing. There being no evening program at the fair ground there was no extended list of attractions at eight for vi itors. Those who desired were given an opportunity to witness an atrociously bad modern comedy called Rooms for Rent at the Academy. To sit this out was a trifle worse than to endure the disagreeable weather outside. The ball of the fire department at Masonic Hall was

AN UGLY ROW.

How a Reckless Driver and His Friends Were Mauled.

A very interesting melse occurred on the Sixteenth street bridge last evening. A light spring wagon containing four men and a couple of kegs of beer was being driven over the bridge at a rapid rate. At the same time a large number of people were coming from the fair over the bridge in the opposite direction. Those who saw the occurrence say the team was not only driven rapidly but recklessly, and the consequence was that a knot of people unable to get out of the way were run into. Two men were knocked down and severely bruised. The A. D. Phelps, Moberly, Mo., enters hold of the horses and pulling the four occupants from the wagon proceeded to maul them in a most discouraging way, The men were not disposed to stand the beating tamely and a very ugly row was inaugrated. At first the belligerents confined themselves to nature's weapon, but soon J. McDougal, Dallas, Tex., enters brickbats and clubs began to be flourished around in a way to induce honest citizens to seek -helter. The four men were being mauled in a frightful manner when they drew revolvers and showed a determination to use. Other people also drew weapons and for a minutes things looked serious. Finally a number of people passing interfered, giving the men an opportunity to drive off, which they did. The on-ly results of the row are a number of serious bruises and a few heads that will need repairs.
