Distinguished Pennsylvaniaian.

Hon. J. B. Finlay, of Kittanning, Pa., arrived in Omaha yesterday, in company with E. D. Pratt, of this city. They have been spending a few weeks together among the many pleasant retreats of Colorado, enjoying the cool and pure atmosphere of its snow-capped mountains, which are reported to be glittering with silver and gold. Hon. Mr. Finlay is a gentleman of culture, refinement and wealth. He has twice represented the state of Pennsylvania as commissioner to foreign countries. He has held the commission of captain, colonel and brigadier general in the United States army. He is also a "Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London," a "Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature," a Fellow of the Royal Asiatic Society, and a Fellow of the Society of the Antiquaries of Scotland." He has also been honored with the university degrees of "D. C. L." and "L. L. D.," and is now a chosen representative from the United States to the International Association at Vienna, which embraces the prominent scholars of the world. Mr. Finlay has contributed largely by his means and influence to the growth and development of this state and city. It is to be hoped his sojourn here will be one of pleasure and profit.

FEATURES OF THE FAIR.

Description of the Agricultural Implement Display.

The agricultural and utility machine display at the State fair which attracted so many thousand visitors during the past week, was exceptionally fine. The word was used, because, unfortunately for those who have been disappointed in attending, there have been many of the goods have been removed. Enough remains, however, of the exhibit to give an idea of the whole. By reason of lack of space the Bee has heretofore been unable to present a detailed account of this very interesting and by far the best represented department of the State Fair. If the visitor approached the north side of the grounds by the pleasant drive or footway on the east, probably the first thing that caught his eye was the numerous windmills, of all heights, sizes, patterns, colors and degrees of utility. Right in front were two turbine mills, of iron, light, hand-painted and evidently whirling for all they were worth. These two are the "Martin's Patent," exhibited by the agent of the manufacturers, Peoria, Foss & Co., of Springfield, Ill. A wooden mill, by the side of the others, in the "Enterprise," from Sandwich, Ill. It is very simple, cheap and durable. On the opposite side, called the "Croft." It is for a turbine mill, the simplest imaginable. Consequently it is strong. If there is a breath of air it catches it and goes round with that straw whiff of atmosphere so fast that it almost creates a little breeze of its own to "keep the ball a rolling" and the mill whirling. It seems so, anyhow, for when the other mills were still, or only moving around with a "don't care" whether school keeps or not? motion, the Croft, low down to the ground, was just "getting its work in," and making everybody in the vicinity believe the wind was blowing forty knots an hour. It's a fine machine and will do any amount of work. Goo. W. Kendall of Omaha, who represents the mill, was in attendance all the week and very courteously explained its working to the intelligent and ignorant questioners alike. On the west side of Power hall there were more mills. The Perkins Windmill Company of Miamisburg, Ind., had a mill high up in air which did effective service. The other mills represented were the "Champion Wind Power," manufactured by Powell and Douglas, Waukegan, Illinois, and the "Buckeye" turbine, manufactured by the same company. Both are represented in Omaha by H. E. Keyner, Faribanks & Co., of St. Louis, had a big mill up the "Challenge" mill comes from Batavia, Ills.; and the Adams mill from Marseilles. All of these mills have their individual points of excellence which only personal observation can show.

WAGONS.
As the wagon plays such an important part in the economy of the farm it demands especial attention. Nearly all of the better known wagon companies in the country were represented and their display formed a valuable part of the exhibit. The following wagons were on exhibition: The Moline, Smith, Brainard, Whitewater, Buchanan, Caldwell, Bain and Cortland. All of these have superior points of excellence and little difference exists between some of them. Two or three, however, are worthy of mention. They are the Smith wagon, which took the only premium awarded wagons—honorable mention—the Moline and the Bain. The Moline company and its representatives are somewhat sore over the award made to the Bain company. Both are regular "horses" of agricultural machinery, still they are a very useful wagon. The amount of work ever brought to Nebraska for exhibition. It was a large wagon than the ordinary, constructed of the finest wood, painted and varnished in a most artistic fashion. This big and handsome vehicle, with its dark colored wheels and darker body, glistened with golden bands and bars, was the center of attraction east of the Power Hall. Why it was overlooked by the judge in distributing awards is one of those things which in the language of the lamented Sothen, "No fellow can find out." While the Smith wagon deserved creditable mention, it is impossible to see what comparison could be drawn to discriminate against the splendid piece of work which the Moline company presented. W. C. Brunton, who represents the Moline company's manufacturer, has the satisfaction of at least knowing that if the judges overlooked his wagon the people did not. The Smith company's representative, J. C. Clark, of Lincoln, says his wagon received the award upon its merits for usefulness, and not upon paint or fancy colorings. This is doubtless true, but at the same time the application to the Moline is not very forcible. Both these wagons and the others, too, have so many points of excellency that criticism is unnecessary, and a general observation of commendation includes the whole.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
The numerously represented branch of this display covers nearly everything which has not been mentioned. It is possible only to mention most of the various mechanical wonders and labor saving machines, and give those of extraordinary merit or curious construction a passing word of commendation. A great many of the exhibits were put in place and shown to advantage by the State and local agents. Among the most prominent was that under the supervision of F. D. Cooper, of Omaha, who is state agent for Emerson & Co.'s standard goods. In this lot were the celebrated Buckeye seeder and drill, manufactured at Springfield, Ohio, the spring tooth pulverizer, manufactured by Phelps & Co., of Minneapolis; and binders and mowers, manufactured by D. M. Osborne & Co., of Auburn, N. Y.; the Brown corn planter, cultivators and stalk cutters, the excelsior check rows, from Galesburg, Emerson, Talcott & Co.'s corn planter; and Foss & Co., of Springfield, Ohio; the machinery from the same place, including Buford's Broomcorn plow, and Bradley, of Chicago. All of these the Grand Detour company's cultivator and the Daisy hay rake. This large line of machinery is all of superior merit and reputation, and was arranged by Mr. Cooper in a very attractive style. His display constantly drew admiring crowds about the large platform which it covered.

The Davenport plow company was represented by a large line of hand and sulky plows.

Furst & Bradley, of Chicago, exhibited plows, harrows, cultivators and hay rakes.

Thomas & Sons' line of sulky rakes were exhibited by W. J. Kennedy.

The Richmond Champion grain drill and feeder, manufactured at Richmond, Ind., was a machine much noticed and admired. In connection therewith, also, were exhibited the Champion hay rake and corn planter.

Mr. S. W. Croy, of Davenport, Iowa, the general agent, who showed their goods off to the best possible advantage.

This is the only company manufacturing goods west of the Missouri river, and it is unnecessary to say that western men appreciate western goods when properly made.

The sales of the Kansas manufacturing company in Nebraska are largely in excess of those of any other manufacturing company, and the Caldwell wagons are on sale by nearly every responsible dealer in the state.

Had the Caldwell wagons been entered in time for competition, they would have been awarded the first premium.
