A SAD SABBATH.

Which Was Appropriately Observed in Omaha.

Large Congregations Give Tearful Attention

To the Voice of the Pulpit on the Nation's Loss.

The Christian Character of James A. Garfield the General Theme.

The president's death was the theme of discourse from nearly every pulpit in our city yesterday. The day was bright and cheerful in strong contrast to the sombre hue of appearance of the streets and the badges of mourning of the citizens. Large congregations filled the churches and listened with careful attention to the discourses on the life and Christian character of the president. With few exceptions every church in the city was draped in the habiliments of woe.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, of which denomination the late president was a life long and consistent member, was elaborately draped in mourning. On the wall, fronting the entrance, hung the motto:

We mourn our brother.

surrounded by festoons of crape. The walls of the main auditorium were hung with crape and the pulpit was covered with black cloth. Immediately behind the desk hung a portrait of the president draped in mourning, and below it motto:

Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel.

The singing by the choir was very fine. The song, "He is gone," was rendered in a superb manner by Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Bartlett.

THE DISCOURSE.

Rev. J. W. Ingram began as follows: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

To-day we all mourn the loss of a true and faithful friend, and weep around the bier of our most honored ruler, who the church mourns the departure of a cherished brother. Together we drink of the bitter cup. Especially have we lost a gifted member of our church; the world a friend; the nation a ruler. As a citizen he challenges our admiration, as a statesman he commands our respect, as a Christian our love. Few have left behind them at death so many beautiful lessons.

These lessons should be remembered. Garfield united with the Christian church when its religious view were regarded as dangerous heretic. His connection aroused the bitter, intolerant and persecuting spirit of that age. He saved little for man's approval, but followed where duty pointed. This act manifested his humble spirit. During his political campaigns he always sought out his own brethren and worshipped with them, once advised to attend a wealthier church, he said, "My brother, I go to church not to electioneer for office. "As a Christian he was courageous, not stubbornly but from love for revealed truth. In the little church in which he worshipped at Mentor I have preached many times. When at home, Garfield always attended. As I look upon that grand man, seated in the midst of that plain humble group of country worshippers, and hear him mingle his manly voice with theirs in song, and then bow his massive head with theirs in a solemn prayer to God, my soul fills with emotion, and by faith I can see as he stands in the midst of the poor, the blind, the lame, the outcasts of earth and dispensens to them his heavenly blessings. The assassin's bullet cut him down in all his manly prime. For while he had laid away laborious duties and sought rest and recreation. But not one word of murmur or complaint escaped his lips. Calmly and patiently up to the last moment he bore his great sufferings, while the Nation demanded the blood of the miserable assassin, not one word of revenge fell from his lips. What heavenly hope shines forth in the life and death of James A. Garfield. He was an honor to any nation, a joy to any people, a light to any church. But, alas! our country's brother, our friend, our president, is dead, and sorrow has entered into every American home.

My brethren, we hope to meet him, to see him, to enjoy him and his wonderful endowments of mind and heart far beyond the shadow and sorrows of earth.

"How sleep the brave, who sunk to rest, By all their country's wishes blest! When spring, with dewy fingers cold, Returns to deck their hallowed mould, Than fancy's feet have e'er trod. By fairy hands their knell is rung, By forms unseen their dirge is sung; There honor comes, a pilgrim gray, To bless the turf that wraps their clay; And freedom shall awhile repair, To dwell a weeping hermit there."

But sweeter far are these words: "Servant of God, well done; Rest from thy loved employ; The battle fought, the victory won, Enter thy Master's joy."

The voice of midnight came; He started up to hear; A mortal arrow pierced his frame, He fell—but felt no fear.

The pains of death are past, Laborer's sorrow ceases; And life's long warfare closed at last, His soul is found in peace. Soldier of Christ! Well done; Praised be thy new employ, And while eternal ages run, Rest in thy Savior's joy."

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. At the First Congregational church the front of the choir railing was beautifully draped in American flags, grape and flowers. The pulpit and chancel were also hung with crape and evergreens. The decorations were made by Mrs. Clark Woodman. The choir rendered during the evening in beautiful style several anthems.

Rev. A. H. Sherrill took for his text Acts 11-24. "For he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

It seemed to me appropriate, and I thought you would agree with me, said Mr. Sherrill, that we should hold a simple memorial service this evening in respect to our late president whom we all loved so much; not to rehearse his history or to hear an eloquent eulogy or pay many forms of respect, but by our silent presence and sincere sorrows testify our respect and love for him who has gone from us. The thought uppermost in my mind for the past week is this—that the remarkable display during the past week of respect and sorrow is one of the most wonderful tributes to character we have ever beheld. It is as universal in the south as the north, reaches all classes and politics and sectional differences seem forgotten. It extends in like way sincerely to Great Britain, all Europe and the whole civilized world.

Why is it? It is a tribute to character, to goodness, chiefly because it was the common belief that he was a good man, a good father, husband, citizen, friend, true patriot and Christian. It was our common conviction that he was a man who meant to do well and succeeded. We are solemn over his death and yet we have a solemn pride that since we do not have to mourn for a George III, or a Lewis XVI. It is a kind of tribute to humanity itself. Why do we hear so much in regard to Mrs. Garfield, and why such universal sympathy, so that she even has homage almost equal to her husband's? It is that she has been

A QUEEN OF FASHION, a star in literary circles, the public champion of the rights of her sex, the wife of the president? No, it is not any of these. It is because of her character. She is believed to have been in all respects a good wife and mother who loved her husband more than any other place, and her husband more than any other man, who quietly, hopefully, equally worked hand in hand with him from obscurity to greatness; his best and most helpful companion, his chief adviser and helper; whom was first thought of and watched with him when his sore hurt came, and who has shown through all these dreary weeks, a fortitude, a devotion, a love, possible only to a woman. Humanity has said that is the chief greatness of a woman, and what they delight to honor.

Dr. Adler is lately reported to have said: The thinking mind of to-day is drifting away from the Christian faith—an expression of the man not the result of careful observation; for thinking men do not drift. Is it not worth something that this man of superior abilities, thoroughly read in the best philosophies, especially the German,

A DEEP, CLEVER THINKER, well acquainted with men, was a full and ardent believer in the Christian faith, in accord with the authority of the bible, loved to study its teachings and honored its chief doctrines, and shaped his life by them.

I wish, in the presence of his bier, as it were, to say a word in behalf of our present chief magistrate. I wish to repeat once more the sentiment expressed from ocean to ocean, to give him our confidence and support. He came to the presidency under trying circumstances, but he can meet all demands of the people if we will but support him.

It is hard to realize that James A. Garfield is gone. Let us not simply mourn, let us be thankful for such a man in our nation and for the memory and example of his virtues. Let us be thankful for a government and institutions that can develop one from

SO GREAT OBSCURITY to so great honor. Let us be ready to recognize goodness wherever it exists, thankful that if the scepter and crown must fall and in the grave be laid, that the actions of the just will ever blossom and grow sweet, and thus he ever lives. Let us not think of him as dead, but, having passed the threshold, has entered that grand life, where he has even more than his old strength, buoyancy of spirit and active power, and where he is already engaged in higher service and enjoying higher reward than was ever possible here. "For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. At the First Presbyterian church the pillars at the entrance to the stairways were hung with crape, relieved by white silk bows. The choir was draped with black cashmere and fringed with autumn leaves. The chandelier supporting the pulpit rail was wreathed with black and entwined with smilax. The pulpit presented a sombre appearance in its draping of black cashmere, a heavy fold of which suspended from the desk, contained in its center an exquisite cross of geranium leaves and tube roses. The gallery rail at the rear was completely covered with black cloth edged with leaves and relieved at equal distances by wreaths of white and berries of red. The pastor, REV. WM. J. HARRIS, preached an eloquent discourse from the text, I Samuel 22, 2. "And every one that is in distress and every one in debt, and every one that was discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became a captain over them." The preacher drew a parallel between the course at the cave of Abdullum, over which David became captain, and which compose our population over which President Garfield was the chosen ruler. He pointed out those traits of character which fitted him so fully for the high position of the magistracy, and dwelt upon the example of his social purity, political honesty and Christian character. He concluded with a glowing eulogy on the president, beautifully draped in American flags, "Hark! that swelling music," he chanted, "There is a calm for those who weep," a male quartette, "Go to thy rest in peace," and a chant, "Rest, with the choir, taking the place of Mr. Van Kuren, who could not be present. Miss Alice Rogers presided at the organ in the absence of E. S. Mayo.

FIRST METHODIST CHURCH. At the First M. E. church the Rev. J. B. Maxfield preached from I Sam. 3, 38: "Know ye not that there is a great prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel." He drew special attention to General Garfield as a Christian statesman and a brave soldier and an upright ruler. The church was handsomely draped in mourning and the pulpit covered with crape.

ST. BARNABAS CHURCH. At St. Barnabas church the memorial service was held in the evening. The Rev. John Williams preaching a powerful sermon on the life and example of the dead president. The choir sang the De Profundis and the burial chant, the choral altar and pulpit were draped in black.

EIGHTH STREET CHURCH. In his opening prayer at the Eighth street M. E. church, Rev. Mr. Shanks referred in touching language to the national affliction and prayed that it might be blessed to the nation's good. A handsome portrait of the murdered president, shrouded in black hung before the pulpit. The music was selected with special reference to the occasion.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL. At Trinity cathedral a large congregation was in attendance. The arch over the chancel was festooned in black, relieved by silver wreaths, the altar cloth of white was deeply edged with black, a cross of tube roses and geraniums depending from the centre. The musical program, in accordance with the bishop's pastoral, included the De Profundis. After the Litany and communion services had been read Dean Millsbaugh preached a sermon from the text, Hebrews IX, 27, "And it is appointed unto men once to die." After referring to the mortality of men the dean said: "Let us direct our thoughts to our martyred president whom God saw fit to place on the summit of power only for a brief moment. Never has there been such universal sorrow. The grief in France over the death of Henri XIV., the sorrow over the death of Abraham Lincoln, was not like ours. James A. Garfield was a ruler who believed that the religion of Jesus Christ was the one thing to live by and the one thing to die by." After referring to numerous historical instances, the dean urged his hearers to take to heart the lessons of the president's life and to set their affections on things above.

CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL. At half-past ten o'clock mass in St. Phenomena's cathedral yesterday Very Rev. Father Nugent, editor of the Liverpool Catholic Times, the Weekly Register and Family Journal, preached a very brilliant sermon on the Irish race and a few of the pitfalls that now threaten them. At the conclusion he spoke of the high esteem in which President Garfield was held across the water, and closed his address with an eloquent eulogium on the dead president.

THE PRESBYTERY. They Pass Resolutions on the President's Death.

The following resolutions were passed by the presbytery of Omaha at its session just closed at Tekamah:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the God of Nations, to remove the executive head of the republic, in a most tragic and startling manner, and while the moral bearings of the tragedy are of a nature to awaken the profoundest solitude, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, 1. By the presbytery of Omaha, that we hereby solemnly recognize the hand of the wise and good God in this dread provision, and bow to his holy will, praying for wisdom to discern clearly the admonitions and reproofs involved therein, as well as the path of duty in upholding and propagating those moral sentiments and principles which must ever constitute the bed-rock of all social and civil nobility and order.

2. That we reaffirm the necessity of faith in a personal God, a due sense of whose fatherhood gives vitality to man's sense of brotherhood and sacredness to human life.

3. That we deprecate the recklessness of that unholy political aspiration which nominates itself to power, and procures success by purchase and patronage.

4. That we have admired the Christian character of James A. Garfield, in all his public life, and have looked with admiration upon his persistence in suffering, and therefore emphasize the necessity of a more careful realization of the Christian element in the home, the society, and the state.

5. That we thank Almighty God for the example of honesty in public life, conscientiousness in severe temptation, and Christian simplicity in corrupt society.

That we devoutly and gratefully acknowledge that "The Lord doeth all things well."

Masoplar Men. Clarence Whistler, Omaha's wrestler, accompanied by Andy Muldoon (the "solid man"), of New York, and Andrew Christol, a notable French athlete, passed through this city yesterday on their way to Chicago. They return in a few days to give exhibitions in Council Bluffs, and also in this city. Whistler is an old Omaha boy, and is well known in the city.
