Spaulding's Arm Amputated—Greenback Speech by Weaver.

Explosion Notes and Other Brief Items.

John N. Baldwin, of this city, one of the rising young orators of western Iowa, in presenting the resolutions adopted by our board of trade in the public square touched, by his words of sympathy for the stricken family who mourn the loss of so noble a head, the hearts of his hearers. Strong men in the audience were observed to shed tears. In the course of his remarks Mr. Baldwin said: "This can be no ordinary occasion. All these manifestations of sorrow and grief do not occur because of the passing away of an ordinary mortal man.

NEVER IN HUMAN HISTORY has there been so universal, so profound an expression of the nation's bereavement. No such sorrow, grief or services, when the self same people were called together by the heads of government to pay the last sad tribute to thousands who had died fighting for their country's cause. It seems as if it was more for them to bear than the untoward or adverse result of a battle wherein for a time were the issues of the life or death of the nation. There is something startling and staggering in these thoughts; when we ponder upon all that has transpired within the past few days, and know that to-day fifty millions of a great and intelligent people are so bowed down with grief and sorrow, we are forced to exclaim, oh, how great and good must have been the man whose death should be so deeply mourned! Mr. Baldwin paid a glowing tribute to the character of our deceased president, while in this life. In speaking of his fortitude he said: "When that accursed bullet went crashing through his body, and all who stood over him expected death from the shock, he calmly dictated a message of love and tenderness to his absent wife. Then, again, after lying nine long hours with that bullet bed suffering from the shock she received. G. W. Clark, engineer of engine No. 221, was knocked out of the cab, and the headlight of his engine was demolished. The train to which the engine was attached was at a station four miles away.

Quite a serious accident occurred yesterday afternoon in this city, opposite the Ogden house. A woman from Boomer township was sitting in a rig while her husband was making some purchases in J. L. Foreman's store. She had, it is supposed, imbibed too freely, and the team he was driving into the rig, turning the same completely over. The woman was more or less injured and the rig considerably damaged.

One of the most eloquent tributes paid to our departed chief magistrate was paid yesterday by Rev. Father McMenomy. It would seem that Garfield was respected by the Catholic people throughout the union more than any other president has ever been. Father McMenomy became eloquent when alluding to the life of poverty from which Garfield sprang, and this fact alone in his life seems to be honored above all others by the Irish people.

Some few days ago a few Israelites of this city got together and concluded that they would issue a call to all who were of the same faith to meet and effect an organization. About thirty of the fifty who reside here responded, and a permanent organization was perfected with the following officers: President, Henry Eisenman; vice president, L. H. Moosler; cashier, Simon Eisenman. It was voted to hold their first divine services on last Saturday evening. A fund of sixty dollars was raised to defray expenses and a committee appointed to procure a place of worship. The committee secured the hall on Pearl street, known as the Knights of Pythias hall, and appointed Mr. Herzman, a dry goods dealer on Broadway, assisted by Mr. Moosler, to officiate. The first meeting was a success. On the Sabbath following they held memorial services. Mr. Herzman delivered quite an interesting discourse. He took the life of James Abram Garfield and compared it with Abraham, the patriarch of old, the middle name suggesting the theme, in his native language. Mr. Herzman is quite an interesting speaker.

Some time ago quite a company of traveling men met in the city of Cleveland and a motion was made that they repaired in a body to the residence of James A. Garfield. They did so. The late president received them very cordially and from the steps addressed them briefly. In the course of his remarks he said that the traveling fraternity of America had grown to such gigantic proportions that they had become one of the most potent factors in the machinery of the commerce of the country. The boys who were stopping at the Ogden here Monday, remembering his words on that occasion, determined in a public way to show their respect for the man who had lived and died for the benefit of the world.

without true morality. That we should rise to a nobler conception of our destiny and feel that our work as a nation is to carry freedom and religion and a noble power of human nature over this continent. He believed that a nation's destiny lies in its character and the principles which govern its policy, and that a nation renouncing or defying this can not be free or great. In conclusion the speaker said: "The nation arose at every stage of his coming.

Early yesterday morning THE BEE reporter called at the home of Joseph Spaulding, the young man who was accidentally wounded while engaged in firing the salute. Mr. Spaulding is a young man about 35 years of age. Early in the beginning of the war he entered the army, enlisting in Co. I, 37th Indiana. We found him lying on the bed suffering severe pain, the limb not having, up to that time, been amputated. His right arm is shattered the entire length, and should have been amputated immediately. This morning it looked as if mortification had set in. Doctors Pusey, Lyman and Green have the case in hand. We understand they entertained some hopes that the arm could be preserved, but yesterday morning they abandoned the idea and amputated the limb. Mr. Spaulding thinks no blame should attach to the thumper. He believes that there is a defect on the inside of the cannon, that holds a large quantity of fire, sometime after a discharge. It would seem that his views are correct, this being the second victim of a premature discharge from this same cannon.

Two men who were riding up in "Grand View" park report that just before the explosion took place they saw a man standing on top of the car trying to put out the fire, and give it as their opinion that he was blown to pieces. A stone weighing 500 pounds was blown one mile and landed in one of our streets. The explosion yesterday caused considerable damage to the pump manufactory of J. A. J. Churchill. The glass is reported to have been blown out of the entire front of the transfer building. Fifteen panes of stained glass were blown out of the Congregational church on Center street. A woman by the name of Nancy Stall, living two miles from the scene of the explosion, was knocked down and made senseless. She is now in court, is in the city. He will open court here to-day. H. B. Williams, Glenwood, and Judge Loofbourrow were at the Ogden yesterday. The following representatives of the Rock Island railroad are at the Ogden: A. R. Swift, H. F. Roise, H. Cave, J. F. Phelps, W. Hudson. A. B. Taylor left for Chicago yesterday.

Ladies, you cannot make fair skin, rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers of the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such good health, strength, buoyant spirits and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof.—Telegraph.

The northwestern portion of the republic of Mexico, the vast and at present inaccessible hive from whence swarm these pests of the plains and mountains. In the ravines and hidden valleys of the Sierra Madre, and in the innumerable caves that honey-comb the sides of the giant mountains, the hill Apaches, the most cruel and brutal of all the American aborigines, make their homes. In the valleys that lie among the foot-hills, which on either side flank the Sierra Madre range, the Mesquero Indians, from the Rio Grande, on the southern limit, to the boundary line between Sonora and Arizona, range free and unrestrained, the masters of a vast region of country.

The Comanches, who belong to the same family as that tribe which was once so powerful in Texas, have several villages near the northern frontier of Sonora, and often join the Mesqueros, the hill Apaches and their brethren of the plains on their sanguinary and destructive raids against the villages and haciendas of northern Mexico. With the exception of those cities, towns and villages sufficiently populous to keep ordinary bands of savages at a distance, almost the entire states of Chihuahua, Durango and Coahuila are subject to these constantly recurring raids. Until within the last five years these incursions were periodic, the boys were at once incorporated into the Indian youth, and in time became the bravest and most ferocious of the tribe. The Mesqueros, in 1868, could bring 2,500 warriors in the field; the Comanches, when united, could collect about 1,500, while the hill Apaches of Chihuahua and Sonora could gather together at least 4,000 warriors at any point desired. The plain Apaches, a kindred tribe, which concentrated numbered about 600 fighting men. The Mesqueros and Comanches are remarkably brave and gallant. They will fight the Mexicans when the latter outnumber them three to one, nor do they regard the American soldiers as better than their Mexican comrades. For many years they have held undisputed sway over the region they claim as their own, nor is there a case on record of their having been defeated by an equal number of Mexican soldiers.

The plain Apaches are also brave, but deal more in wiles and stratagem than in open warfare; yet they are foes by no means to be despised when fighting in their own territories. The hill Apaches are the most terrible of all the savages along the frontier. They are wily and astute, and never fight in the open field. Should a party of well armed white men, numbering more than thirty, pass through the heart of their country, they will not attack them if they beloved they were liable of losing of their own force a number equal to their enemies. It is utterly impossible to surprise them in their villages and caves, for they possess a vast number of half-stayed cur dogs who roam nightly far from the villages, and on the approach of strangers awake their masters by their loud barking yelps.

Col. Moore and a part of the Sixth infantry have arrived from the camp on White river, in Colorado, and left on special train for Salt Lake City. They report that the White River Utes have all returned from the agency at the junction of the White and Green rivers, Utah, where they were paid by the Ute commission, to their old haunts on the White river, near the military camp. The Indians say that they will on no condition whatever stay on the new reservation. They are all supplied with arms and ammunition, and if any forcible attempt to compel them to remain on the new reservation is made it will lead to a large Indian outbreak, in the opinion of military authorities. This tribe of Indians perpetrated the Meeker and Thornburg massacre that occurred two years ago. A carrier who arrived to-day from the military camp on the White river reports that present indications portend an outbreak and massacre. The settlers along the river on the Indian reservation have been driven away by Indians and have fled to the military camp for protection, reporting their wagons and ranches burned and signal fires on all the mountains.

James B. Weaver spoke yesterday in the opera house to a large audience, composed mostly of farmers. We can say with truth that whether there is anything in the position he takes on the currency question or not, he is a very interesting speaker. If any man can get anything out for the party to recuperate upon he can. He is very pleasing in his manner. His speech is delivered in apparent sincerity. He stated that if the 50,000 democrats would crawl on the sheet and remain there the 20,000 greenbackers could overcome the 85,000 republican majority in Iowa, and some present really believed it. He handed the national banks without stint, showing the way they originated and told how these men sold their property and shouldered their share of taxation on to the rest of the people.

W. P. Hepburn was at the Ogden yesterday. Came over, we presume, to hear Weaver. Ben. Clayton, the farmer statesman, from Macedonia, was in the city yesterday. He took in Weaver. Judge Love, of the U. S. supreme
