The universal complaint here, but no particular damage to the town was done, as it is situated on the "second bench" of the tertile and picturesque Elkhorn valley. Over seventy car loads of lumber have been sold from the yards of Hooper for building purposes in the country, instead of under sod shelter.

At present there are but five or six stores and the necessary shops, but there is plenty of room for more. From 6,000 to 9,000 pounds of freight is laid down here daily, and a monthly record of 100 cars of grain shipped for the past summer. Large quantities of grain are shipped from this point to Denver and other western markets. Hooper has also a neat little brick church and one of the finest large brick school houses one usually meets, located upon the summit of the bluff immediately south of town, overlooking the entire country for miles around and surrounded with a young grove which makes the place very attractive.

A brick yard here has made and sold over seven hundred thousand brick the past summer. Many are shipped away.

An amateur brass band lately organ-ized, attended the public services held here on the 26th inst.; under the leadership of Rol Davis, they did themselves honor by completely "filling the bill."
