THE HEREAFTER.

Some Views on the Subject by Major Whittle.

He Thinks There are Degrees of Bliss in Heaven,

And Talks of Accidents of Birth and Predestination.

"What is your idea of hell?" This question was asked Maj. Whittle, one of the two revivalists in this city, last evening, as he and a reporter for THE BEE sat quietly chatting on the first floor of the Presbyterian church building. Maj. Whittle has been before the country for many years in the capacity of a revivalist, and next to D. L. Moody probably has no equal in this country. It was through the efforts of that great evangelist that Maj. Whittle was induced to undertake the work he is engaged in, after his return from the army. Maj. Whittle is a man of medium size and in general outline resembles Moody, although not quite so stout. He is compactly put together and his features are boldly outlined. He wears a full coal black beard, closely cropped, and in appearance is grave and thoughtful. His voice is deep and sonorous. There is considerable magnetism about the man and a sympathetic vein in his voice that draws people to him. Maj. Whittle showed some diffidence about answering questions to be published in an interview, but finally said: "Hell is a place of punishment. " "Is the Bible to be construed literally when it speaks of the fire of hell?" "It may be physical fire as we understand it and the word may be used as a figure of speech to bring to our conception the idea of such torture. But that there is such a place of everlasting torture you may see by referring to Mark xix., 43 to 48. "Than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched."

"In heaven an absolutely located place?"

"It is. 'I go to prepare a place for you,' said Christ."

"Does the terms angels and saints as mentioned in the Bible indicate that there are two order of beings in heaven?"

"It does. As I understand it angels are an order of beings who have never lived on earth; while saints are redeemed sinners. See I Hebrews 13 and 14."

"Are the references to streets of gold and the walls of heaven to be taken literally?"

"As I take it the terms are used to convey to our finite understandings the infinite bliss and glory of heaven. The highest earthly ideals of magnificence are used so that we may, to an extent, comprehend the transcendent beauty of the home to come."

"From your reading of the Bible it is indicated that St. Peter will occupy a different position in heaven from the rest of the saints?"

"He was one of the apostles and the title will be raised above the other saints, but I cannot see it indicated that he will have a special duty outside of them. In xxi. Revelations 21 to 14 is shown that the apostles shall sit in judgment over the twelve tribes of Israel."

"Are there degrees of bliss in heaven, and of punishment in hell?"

"First Corinthians, 15-41, says: 'There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory.' I think from this there will be different degrees of bliss. See also Daniel xii., 3. In regard to punishment see Luke xii., 47-48: 'And that servant which know his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.'

"Has the accident of birth any influence on the judgment hereafter? Suppose a child with a natural disposition to do good is thrown into evil surroundings and turns out badly, would the influences about it be considered in the judgment?"

"God-fearing man—has this any effect on the judgment in the world to come?"

"People are judged by the light they have. See II Romans, 11-12: 'For as many persons as have survived without law shall perish without law; and as many as have survived in the law shall be judged by the law.'

"Is there a distinct individual devil?"

"I think so. I have tried many other ways of satisfactorily explaining the causes which impel men to sometimes do such awful deeds, but can do no other ground. Take Guiteau for instance. In this connection let me refer you to x Luke 18 and iv Matthew 1 to 11. 'And he said to them, I beheld satan as lightning fall from heaven. There is an evil being constantly exerting a malign influence on mankind.'

"Do you believe that those who are converted are able to feel and realize the moment they are saved?"

"No. Different persons receive the knowledge in different ways. I put aside the feeling in the matter altogether. He must accept the Lord Jesus, John vi., 37; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out. Preparation? No there need be none. All that is required is a trust in God and a willingness to receive him. Yes you must feel, but you must not base your knowledge of salvation on feeling; trust in God's word. There are things in these we cannot understand, but as was said to President Garfield can't you accept Christ as a model?"

"What is your idea of predestination?"

"You will find it in 1 Ephesians, 5, 6 and 9: 'Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL

Be fittingly Celebrated by the Emmet Monument Association.

Speeches and Music, Mirth and Dancing Freely Indulged in.

Col. Chase, A. C. Campbell and John Rush, Speakers of the Evening.

The celebration of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Yorktown by the Emmet monument association in Clark's hall last evening, was a great success.

The event was celebrated first by public addresses, and secondly by a ball. John Groves opened the exercises by proposing that Col. C. S. Chase act as chairman of the meeting. Col. Chase, on assuming the chair, spoke briefly and pointedly on the importance of the event, which had called them together, and spoke in well-chosen words of the existing state of affairs in Ireland. He alluded to the fact that wherever Irishmen were it was their pleasure and privilege to gather together on occasions of this kind, and spoke of it as a significant fact that they were the only nationality assembled in Omaha in commemoration of the great event at Yorktown 100 years ago. He said the historical and other phases of the event would be covered by speakers who were to follow and closed by introducing Mr. A. C. Campbell.

Mr. Campbell said it was meet that they should gather together to celebrate one of the greatest events in the history of nations or men, an event which hinged the destiny of the new world. It was fit and appropriate to meet as Irishmen and Irish Americans, linked to and descended from those whose valor contributed to the success and who took part in the glories of that achievement. It was proper to meet in the name of him—pointing to a picture of Robert Emmet—from whose sacred dust arises inspirations of liberty.

Yorktown was comparatively not a great victory. Scarce 20,000 men were engaged on both sides. Eighty years later, over the same ground had passed an army of nearly half a million. But relatively speaking, the siege of Yorktown was without parallel in the annals of ancient or modern warfare, both as to the military genius displayed and the importance and consequences of its results.

Previous to the victory was the darkest hour the country had ever seen. Its condition was impoverished, the soldiers unpaid and unfed and the continental dollar, which took sixty or seventy to equal the gold coin, was a legal tender only to those who looked on the public good as greater than private interest. Industry in the cities was paralyzed and the face of the country was laid bare with years of ruthless warfare. There was no such thing as a treasury, the arsenals were empty and provisions scarce.

Gates had exchanged his northern laurels for southern willows; Lincoln had surrendered at Chancellorsville; Cornwallis was master in the south and Clinton held New York.

Mr. Campbell then went on to detail the event which led up to the siege of Yorktown: Lafayette being sent south to harass the enemy; Washington's letter to him being intercepted by the British; how the siege was finally begun and Cornwallis caged in Yorktown while the French fleet in the harbor prevented escape on the one hand and success on the other.

Mr. Campbell then went on to say that this was the crowning victory and gained American independence. There have been greater battles than Yorktown, greater in the blood spilled, greater in the lives that have been lost, greater in the treasures that have been wasted, in the homes desolated, the wives that have been made widows, in the parent rendered childless, greater in the children mangled, orphaned and in the grief and lamentations caused, but none were greater or of more importance to the people. There have been greater battles, but they have been fought in the name of kings and for the benefit of kings, while Yorktown was fought for the people and in the name of liberty.

Mr. Campbell referred to the part taken in the affair by Irishmen and especially instances the two generals, Stark and Mad Anthony Wayne. He then briefly referred to the two central figures of the siege and said we owed a debt of gratitude to Lafayette that mere remembrance could not repay.

What is the lesson of Yorktown and what does it teach? Simply this, that self-government is realized. Before Yorktown self-government was but the dream of the enthusiast, something pleasant to look upon but dangerous to touch. The result at Yorktown showed it to be a reality. Rienzi, in the middle ages, went down to death in the ruin of his capital regarding liberty as visionary and Madame de Staël on the scaffold exclaimed, "Oh, liberty; how many crimes are committed in thy name. Neither had understood the quality of liberty which Yorktown demonstrated."

Mr. Campbell closed with this proclamation: "Let us hope that under the providence of God this priceless boon is ours forever; ours to enjoy and ours to transmit. Let us, in the dawn of this new century of independence, forget past differences, obliterate past grievances, and let all nationalities, all creeds, all conditions and all sections be united in one great, grand and glorious people. Let sectional lines be effaced, let there be no east or west, no north or south; let us move forward influenced by the same system of laws, upheld by the same institutions, protected by the same flag and worshipping and adoring the same God!"

Mr. Campbell closed amid loud applause.

MILITARY HEADQUARTERS.

How the Strang Building Looks Inside.

The imposing and elegant building on the corner of Farnham and Tenth streets, erected for the headquarters of the military department of the Platte, is now fully occupied. A glance yesterday into its interior was sufficient to convince one that it is admirably adapted to the purpose for which it was built. As is plainly apparent from the street, the entire lower floor is occupied by Strang, whose engines and pumps are in fine order. The offices of the department are located on the second and third floors, and on a part of the fourth floor. A broad hall runs nearly the length of the building on each floor and affords access to large and pleasant offices on either side, with three especially spacious ones in front.

General Crook, commander of the department, has his office on the third floor, in the southwest corner. It is numbered room 16. The distinction made in the finishing of this apartment from the rest is that the wood-work is dark. The windows command a magnificent view of the city west and south. Adjoining Gen. Crook's office is room 15, in which Major Roberts and Lieutenants Burke and Schuyler, aids de camp, are to be found. This is also a front room. The remaining front room on this floor is occupied by Colonel Martin, the adjutant general of the department.

The other officers on this floor are Col. Royall, inspector general, room 17; Col. Burnham, judge advocate, room 18; Lieut. Kingman, chief engineer, room 21. The remaining rooms on the third floor, six in number, are occupied by clerks of the adjutant general, judge-advocate and the engineering corps.

On the second floor of the building the following officers have their offices: Major Towar, paymaster, room 1; Col. Stanton, chief quartermaster, room 2; Col. Ludington, chief quartermaster, room 3; Dr. Somers, medical director, and Dr. Barnett, attending surgeon, room 7; Gen. Wilson, chief commissary, room 10; Capt. Thomas, quartermaster, room 13. Rooms 15 and 16 are occupied by the quartermaster's clerks, and room 8 has been fitted up as a neat and complete dispensary. The fourth floor rooms are used for the preservation of the records and occupied by the watchmen.

In general arrangements the part of the building occupied by the department headquarters are most complete. Some of the conveniences—principal among which are the passenger elevator, for coal and other supplies, and the closets are now being put in and will soon be commenced. All of the offices are nicely finished in wood, carpeted and furnished in the best of style. Mr. Strang will soon erect on the east side of the building an addition, with thirty feet front, four stories high, but not as deep as the main building. This will admit of the passenger elevator. A weight elevator, run by steam power, is already in working order. It is located on the east side of the building, and extends from the roof to the cellar.

The department offices are directly connected by telephones with many of the principal points in the city, and can thus transact business over the wires without the assistance of the main telephone office. About twenty-five telegraph lines are occupied. The number of officers in the building, beside the commanding general, is fourteen. It will therefore be seen that General Crook's military family under his immediate supervision is quite numerous. All of the officers are much pleased with the appointments of the building, and doubt if its general arrangement for convenience could have been improved upon.

"Don't Know Half Their Value." "They cured me of Ague, Biliousness and Kidney Complaint, and so recommended. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls, who the doctors and neighbors said could not be cured. I would have lost both of them one night if I had not given them Hop Bitters. They did them so much good I continued their use until they were cured. This is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them high enough."—B., Rochester, N. Y. Standard Club Hop. The seventy-eighth hop of the Standard club was held last evening in their hall on Fifteenth street. The party was both large and gay. Hoffmann's orchestra furnished excellent music. The especially enjoyable feature of this club's receptions is the perfect informality, so that an invited guest feels at ease as soon as he enters the presence of the company.

Mirabile Dicta. "Your Spring blossom is a success. I certainly think its effects are wonderful; all the dyspeptic symptoms I complained of have vanished; my wife is also enthusiastic in praise of it; she was disordered by biliousness and pimples on her face, and had a continuous headache. She is all right now, and all unpleasant eruptions have gone. You may refer any doubtful parties to me."—R. M. WILLIAMS, "Elk street, Buffalo." Price, 50 cents; trial bottles, 10 cents. [17-edw1]

Move in the Right Direction. Of the property owners who are gutting and curbing Tenth street, ex-Ald. "Jim" Stephenson is making the most complete job in front of his stable on the corner of Harney street. He is putting in the best of Joliet quarry stone, and will anticipate the much needed work of paving the street, by paving in front of his property to the street car track. At present twelve property owners are curbing and the drainage of the upper portion of the street will soon be ample.

WORTHY OF PRAISE. As a rule we do not recommend patent medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truly a most valuable medicine. They will surely cure Biliousness, Fever, Stomach, Stomach, Liver and Kidney ailments, even where all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend to all.—[Ex. Sold at 50 cents a bottle. Iah & McMahon.] (4)
