W. S. GIBBS, M. D., Room No 4, Creight Block, 15th Street.

The total wheat crop of the United States is now put at 368,962,000 bushels, against 448,756,630 bushels for 1879, and 480,849,723 bushels for D B. BEEMER. For details see large advertise-ment in Daily and Weekly. 1880, according to the figures of the agricultural department. extraordinary. Illinois, Indiana and Michigan have suffered most severely, the yield in the first mentioned being considerably less than half of that for either of the two years immediately preceding.
The causes which produced this uniform effect are curiously diverse. In California it is a late spring, and in some sections lack of rain. From Illinois east and south the drouth of this year has been something terrible, while in Min-nesota continued heavy rains delayed harvesting and did much damage to grain. In the states lying near Chesapeake Bay there has not been enough rain to do more than moisten the surface of the ground for fifteen weeks. Wells are dry, rivers have disappeared, and already, weeks ago, vegetation appeared as if a heavy frost had passed over it, so completely had it been killed by the long drought. In Minnesota more rain fell in the month of September than in any previous year on record. A gentleman largely interested in wheat farming in the Red River Valley, who boasts this year of an average crop of twenty-eight bushels to the acre, declares that the disappointment there is chiefly owing to the carelessness of the farmers themselves. He attributes his own success to the fact that his grain was put in stack as soon as cut; while others who left theirs in shock, waiting for the thresher, were overtaken by repeated rains and suffered severe loss. It is probable, however, that the shortage will not inflict serious damage upon the farmers as a class. No cases where the crop was a total failure, to be left standing or plowed under, as in previous years, are reported from any section. The decrease comes from a general limitation in the yield per acre, and thus a part of what the farmer loses in quantity is made up to him in price. The point to which wheat has already reached in the market, and the probable range of prices during the month that must elapse humanity and grasping love of money was displayed in Judge Hunt's court yesterday afternoon, during the hearyesterday afternoon, during the hearing of a habeas corpus case to obtain possession of little Adam Cohn. It seems that the child had been forcibly kept away from his dying mother, notwithstanding her pleadings, and Rabbi Messing, touched with the poor woman's tale, had sworn out the writ. The bailiff of the court was sent with an order for Annie Hickert's arrest. In an hour or so he returned with a tall, rawboned woman, clad in an old-time plaid silk dress, that had probably not seen the light of day for a score of years. A dilapidated red shawl completed the attire, and made the tall, gaunt figure seem gigantic. In her arms, squeezed tightly to her, was a pretty little boy, about two years and a half old. She was mad. Every nerve was in a tremor, and her head igreded from side to side as if one words are the light of side to side as if one was proved an analysis of the court of the self-based of the same of peritherer should not be granted, and that no the perither of peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted, and that no the peritherer should not be granted in said county, for three successive weeks, prior to said day of hearing.

The first question asked was if she refused to give up the child. "Yes, she did, unless she had money—money." Rabbi Messing was placed upon the stand to make out a case. He, in a graphic manner, told how Lena Cohn, a beautiful young Jewess, lay, deserted by her husband, upon her death bed, expecting almost any minute to cross over the dark fiver; how she continually cried for her little one, that she might fondle it Election Proclamation on Court her little one, that she might fondle it once again to her besom before taking her last farewell, and how this woman refused to let the child pass for a single instant from her care, unless $300, claimed to be the care, unless $300, claimed to be due for nursing the sick woman, were her care, unless $300, claimed to be due for nursing the sick woman, were paid for. He had, he said, agreed to assume the guardianship of the child and see to its religious training, while on the other hand the captor of the child threatened to alienate the child from its people. The woman was then made to take the stand, which she did, still clutching the child.

"Don't you know," questioned the Judge, "that this poor mother wishes to see her child?"

"Yes," muttered the woman.

"Why don't you let her have it, then?"

"Because I'm a widow and have no time to waste with her," she snapped.

"But why keep the child?"

"Because the mother wanted me to, I spent $100 on her."

"But if you knew that she was dying, and that she yearned to see her child, would you allow her to?" asked the judge.

The woman pondered a moment, then sulkily answered "No."

"Why?" asked his honor."

"But, my good woman," asked the judge, "you must have some affection for the child that leads you to wish to keep it?"

"No; I only like my money."
The bystanders were horrified at the attempt of the woman to hold the child for a debt against a dying woman, especially after she had sued and been beaten in the courts: and more especially at the hard-heart-edness displayed. The judge made out an order to deliver the child into the Rabbi's custody, and when she understood that her sweet revenge was balked, she became a fury. "And won't anybody pay me?" she shricked. Then she mouned out, "Oh, isn't this hard to take the brat from me and not pay me any money?" Even then she refused to give up the child, and it was found best to allow her to clutch the little one in her arms until they could go to the dying
