PRESIDENT ARTHUR AT HOME

Personal and Social Traits of Our New Chief Magistrate.

Ramsdell's Washington Republic.

On certain specified days of the week, in a drawing-room almost large enough for a public hall, overlooking the capitol grounds and furnished with richness and splendor, may be seen during certain hours the man toward whom all eyes are turned and for whom every true American has nothing but feelings of good will and words of encouragement. The man is something over six feet in height, of presence most imposing, a face at once grave, self-possessed and frank, a manner composed and full of dignity and courtesy. His figure, straight as a dart, well-rounded and well-proportioned, is clad in sombre rainment from top to toe, yet a better dressed figure was never seen in a drawing-room. A braid-bound Prince Albert coat of black, buttoned nearly to the chin, dark trousers and gaiters, a black silk scarf fastened with an onyx pin and half covering the whitest of standing collars - these set off the grave lace, the closely-trimmed military whiskers and mustache, the round head with its short, gray-besprinkled hair and the somewhat florid complexion. No one can see this figure standing near the door in an attitude of perfect ease and grace without knowing that it belongs to an American gentleman. The room is well fitted for its uses. Costly lace and satin hangings, furniture of carved and inlaid woods, priceless ornaments of ivory and precious metals, cunningly-wrought bronzes, pictures from master hands and a thousand pretty things decorating tables, cabinets and mantels these furnish the back-ground to the figure which stands near the opened door. The gentleman within that figure welcomes you with quiet cordiality—a cordiality that you feel you cannot trifle with. He shakes you by the hand, and then, while he rolls a bill of paper between his fingers, his hands resting against his breast, he listens to you with patience, if not with interest. He talks little and is guarded. The volubility of deceit is noticeably lacking in him. He says commonplace things most charmingly, and in graver things you feel that he means what he says. You also feel that he has a full appreciation of his great responsibilities, and that while he would rather have escaped them, he will not, having them, endeavor to shrink from them. Thus hurriedly and briefly is sketched the new President as I saw him a few days ago at his temporary residence on Capitol Hill.

Egyptian Mechanics.

New York Times.

The height of the Great Pyramid, the tomb of Khufu, of Cheops, of the fourth dynasty, was originally 480 feet 9 inches, and the base 764 feet. It is virtually a mass of solid masonry, for the rock must take up but a small proportion of the interior, and the chambers and passages have no appreciable relation to the whole bulk. The material chiefly employed is the limestone on which the structure stands, which was in part cleared away to make a level platform; but the finer quality, used for the casing stones and lining of passages, was quarried on the other side of the river, nearly 10 miles away; and the red granite, also used for inner casing and for the sarcophagus, was quarried at Syene, at the extreme south of Egypt, nearly 550 miles away by the course of the river. We must remember that the Third Pyramid, now 203 feet high, was cased in part, or wholly, with granite of Syene. How did the Egyptians contrive to transport and raise these vast blocks of stone? Let us look at the whole process. First, the labor of quarrying, without any of the modern aids of blasting, must have been enormous, especially when the hard red granite, which turns the edges of our modern steel tools, and yet was cut by bronze ones, had to be hewn out and shaped into accurate blocks. The transport to the river was not difficult, and the descent on rafts during the high Nile would have met no risks but for the sand-banks. At this period of the year the rafts would have been brought by a canal very near the site of the pyramid. A causeway, of which there are remains, would have made the land transport less difficult. But it must be remembered that the only mode of moving great masses on land was by means of sledges drawn by men or oxen. So far we see only a vast expenditure of almost unaided labor; how vast we do not appreciate, for it is beyond imagination to master the tremendous work; we are constantly confused by our being unable to cast away the modern notions of facility to which we are accustomed. All this preliminary labor was followed by the actual work of building. The Great Pyramid is not a mass of piled-up stones; it is a model of constructive skill. A sheet of paper cannot be placed between the casing stones, and we can scarcely imagine that any mortar was spread on their sides. The passages present no roughness that could arrest the sarcophagus. Everything was exquisitely finished. Allowance was made for the pressure of the vast mass. The great chamber of the sarcophagus has no less than five small chambers above it to lighten the superincumbent weight; over the entrance of the first passage two great stones are placed in a vaulted position for the same purpose. In consequence nothing has given way. Our real difficulty begins when we endeavor to explain any mode by which the great blocks of which the pyramid is built were placed in position at their various heights until the top stone was put upon the summit, and the work of casing completed the wonder. It would be easy to find a method if it did not entail as much labor as the building of the pyramid itself. Rejecting any such view the most reasonable conjecture that can be offered is that inclined planes ran along the sides of the giant steps in which the pyramid was built, and that the stones were dragged up them by the workmen. It is necessarry here to note that when the mummy of the King had been placed in the sepulchral chamber, the entrance passage was permanently closed, and heavy portcullises lowered at intervals; this needing great mechanical skill. The chapel attached to each pyramid for the sepulchral rites was built at a suitable distance in front of the contrary to the practice in the tombs or subjects around, in which the chapel was constructed in the mass of the masonry, or hewn in the rock. The final closing of every pyramid, which was the universal custom, is an important fact, which is in itself enough to disprove a scientific heresy, according to which deep secrets were concealed in the heart of the Great Pyramid for the enlightenment of remote generations. Prof. Piazza Smyth does not consider the red granite sarcophagus a royal coffin, like every other sarcophagus in Egypt, but a divinely-appointed sacred standard, connecting the ancient measures with, for instance, the English inch. Yet more here, and in other parts of the pyramid, he fancies that he sees the indications of profound astronomical truths, which were unknown to the old Egyptians. This phantasy has been pushed to the length of making the pyramid, not alone a record of an ancient faith, but a stone prophecy of the ages to come. An Egyptologist may ridicule a theory which destroys the whole value of his labors; a logician many protest against the section of one pyramid on which to found a hypothesis and the rejection of all others, and the choice of measurements which best suit the evolution of the fancies of the speculator; but the true answer can only be given by good mathematicians. They can explain the reasons of the proportions which have been interpreted away from their original purpose, and show how easy it is to prove anything to the uninitiated by those "dangerous playthings," numbers which at least deceive the theorist himself. Sir Henry James, royal engineer, and Prof. Wackerbarth, of Upsala, have thus abundantly refuted the extraordinary fancies of Prof. Piazzi Smyth.

Mirabile Dictu.

"Your Spring blossom is a success. I certainly think its effects are wonderful; all the dyspeptic symptoms I complained of have vanished; my wife is also enthusiastic in praise of it; she was disfigured by blotches and pimples on her face, and had a continuous headache. She is all right now, and all unsightly erupt ons have gone. You may refer any doubting parties to me. R. M. WILLIAMSON, "Elk street, Buffalo."

A Woman-Searcher.

De roit Post.

Perhaps searching female prisoners is not one of the most grateful tasks in the world, but that is the vocation of a lady who resides in the Hawley block, and has lived there steadily in the same suit of rooms for sixteen years. Mrs. Hoose, the lady in question, is a pleasant-looking woman, still young. Nothing in her appearance would indicate any unusual strength or determination. She was not at all averse to being interviewed, nor did she seem to think there was anything unusual or unpleasant in her calling.

"I don't mind it at all," she said, "when the ladies are sober, but when they have been drinking they sometimes make me a good deal of trouble. They are all innocent, every one of them, at least they say they are, and when I find the goods on them they wonder how they could have got there. I searched two colored girls the other day who were accused of stealing $1,500 from a man who strayed into their den. They laughed at me and asked if I thought they wouldn't be smart to carry the money around with them. Anyhow they didn't have it."

"Have you many shop-lifters?"

"Yes; they are my best customers. One was brought to me not long ago who pleaded pitifully. She said she would give me all she had in the world if I would only let her go; that her husband was a respectable man and it would break his heart. I had to search her, and I found concealed under each arm-pit a splendid silk and bead cord and tassel. One smuggler whom I searched had no underwear on, but whole pieces of goods were rolled around her; her hair was very thick and I found several pairs of kid gloves twisted up in it. Her husband never came near her, but her brother tried his best to get her cleared."

"Do the women you search belong to a very low class?"

"I search the worst and best. Many cases never get into the papers. Well dressed and respectable women get drunk and disorderly and are brought in, and they send for me to go to the station and search their pockets for their names and address, and for morphine, as these women are all morphine chewers."

"If a husband is sent for to take his wife home and pay a fine he always lays her wrong-doing to morphine. There is another class of women; old maids who work in shops by the day, who once or twice a year go out on a spree with some gentlemen friends who are sure to accuse them of stealing their pocket-books. One man dropped his pocket-book on the street and had a lady arrested whom he said had picked it up. I searched her but found nothing and she was let go."

"Are they very much frightened when you examine them?"

"Yes, and they offer me everything to let them go, but I tell them I must do my duty and usually coax them a little; but if they resist they know I would use main force. Sometimes I have such hard characters to search that the policemen who bring them in are afraid to let me go in a room alone with them. But they never offer me any harm. Some of them are dressed beautifully and with good taste, too. It is not allowable for the men to search them; but one respectable lady who was brought in for shoplifting, or 'kleptomania,' as they call it now, refused to have me search her, and the captain of the precinct searched her. I tell you it would melt a heart of stone sometimes to hear them cry and go on. The old ones get hardened to it and don't mind, but those that are new at it, just as soon as I find the goods, wilt right down."

"What do they steal principally?"

"Everything. There was a gang of Polish women who went round taking all they could lay their hands on. I found children's agates and marbles in their pockets; shoes, clothing and general dry goods; but mostly luxuries. It is a very rare case that any one steals from necessity."

It would seem as if nothing sustains this class of humanity like the "blessed consciousness of guilt." They who are tryos in the art of stealing suffer pangs of shame and consciousness which the searcher, if she has a missionary spirit, might turn to their future good. At 50 cents a head she has all she can do to attend to their corporeal situation.

The room in which she conducts this searching operation is furnished with apertures which give the police an opportunity to watch both the inspector and inspected, thus destroying any possible chance of collusion.
